The Government have noted, however, that some listed companies have not yet adopted sufficient transparency in their Reports such that shareholders have access to the information they may reasonably require to enable them to assess the company's general policy on executive remuneration. The Government also wish to see clearer evidence that boards are complying with the Greenbury recommendation that they "should consider each year whether the circumstances are such that shareholders should be invited to approve the policy set out in their remuneration report".

In addition, the Government would like to see institutional investors using their power and influence to ensure the implementation of best practice as set out in the Greenbury Code.

I have asked my officials to monitor the current round of annual general meetings for evidence of a more positive approach to the Greenbury Code from companies and institutional investors. I will consider the case for legislation to amend the Companies Act 1985 in the light of the results of this monitoring.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many parliamentary questions have been tabled to his Department for written answer on a named day since May 1997; and what percentage of them received a substantive reply on that day. [80743]

Mr. Byers: According to our records, since May 1997, 2,510 questions for answer on a named day have been tabled to this Department, 31 per cent. of these received a substantive reply on the named day.

Public Appointments

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the public appointments for which his Department is responsible and which carry a fee or salary, indicating for each type of appointment the fee or salary band which applies. [80760]

Mr. Byers: The publication "Public Bodies 1998", copies of which are available in the Library of the House, provides information on the levels of remuneration paid to those serving on the boards of non-departmental public bodies for which my Department is responsible. The majority of public appointments, however, are unpaid as most of those who accept a public appointment do so on a voluntary, unpaid basis.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Noise-induced Sensorineural Hearing Loss

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his letter ref. POS (3) 3019/18 of 26 January, what reports she has had on scientific evidence relating to noise-induced sensorineural hearing loss. [80586]

Mr. Bayley [holding answer 13 April 1999]: When we were elected, we were determined to be satisfied that the Department's approach to the assessment of hearing loss on war pensions was seen to be in line with current scientific understanding. We immediately ordered a review of the scientific evidence behind the Department's approach. The review was conducted by four independent hearing loss experts chaired by the Government's then Chief Medical Officer.

The report of the expert team received in March 1998 confirmed that hearing loss due to noise, such as that experienced in service, does not increase after one is removed from it or as subsequent age-related hearing loss is added to it. These conclusions confirmed that the Department's approach to the assessment of hearing loss under the War Pension Scheme is in line with the current scientific understanding.

The review also recommended that the matter be looked at again in one years time. The Under-Secretary, my noble Friend, Baroness Hollis of Heigham, therefore, asked the war pensions medical policy adviser to report to her by the end of February 1999 on any relevant developments. The report of this further review was placed in the Libraries of House of Commons and the House of Lords on 2 March 1999. It confirms that there is no new scientific evidence to raise a reasonable doubt that noise-induced sensorineural hearing loss progressively deteriorates once a person is removed from the source of the noise which caused it; or that the combination of noise-induced sensorineural hearing loss and subsequent hearing loss due to age is not more than additive.

These are assumptions which have gained general acceptance and have formed the basis of an International Standard which has been in place for nearly 20 years and which have successfully provided the basis for medico-legal work world wide.

The conclusions of this further review again confirm that the Department's current approach to the assessment of hearing loss is in line with current scientific evidence. This in turn, means that War Disablement Pensions cannot be increased in respect of hearing loss due to ageing. They can only be paid for disablement which is due to service.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many parliamentary questions have been tabled to his Department for written answer on a named day since May 1997; and what percentage of them received a substantive reply on that day. [80727]

Mr. Timms: Since May 1997, we have received 2,304 parliamentary questions for answer on a named day, of these, 2,090 (91 per cent.) were given a substantive answer on the day requested.

This Department aims to give a holding reply to no more than 10 per cent. of all parliamentary questions for answer on a named day. However, where, for example, detailed work has to be carried out by the Department's analytical branches or the Government's Actuary Department, a full response cannot always be provided in the time allowed.

Public Appointments

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the public appointments for which his Department is responsible and which carry a fee or salary, indicating for each type of appointment the fee or salary band which applies. [80758]

Mr. Timms: "Public Bodies 1998", copies of which are available in the Library of the House, provides information on the levels of remuneration paid to those serving on the boards of public bodies for which the Department is responsible. Many of these appointments are unpaid volunteers.

SCOTLAND

Treaty of Amsterdam

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list each of the new responsibilities which he will assume when the signed Treaty of Amsterdam takes effect and for each (a) the likely effect on departmental staffing, (b) the bodies or persons in the European Union principally concerned and (c) the relevant section of that treaty and the consolidated treaties of the European Union and European Community. [80410]

Mr. Macdonald: The Treaty of Amsterdam will have minimal impact on the responsibilities of the Department.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many parliamentary questions have been tabled to his Department for written answer on a named day since May 1997; and what percentage of them received a substantive reply on that day. [80733]

Mr. Dewar: The information for the period May 1997—February 1998 is not held centrally and could be collected only at disproportionate cost. The information for the period March 1998—March 1999 is as follows:

Nominated questions tabled 1 March 1998–31 March 1999	% answered substantively on date nominated
1,021	62

Public Appointments

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the public appointments for which his Department is responsible and which carry a fee or salary, indicating for each type of appointment the fee or salary band which applies. [80752]

Mr. Dewar: "Public Bodies 1998"—copies of which are available in the Library of the House—provides information on the levels of remuneration paid to those serving on the boards of public bodies for which my Department is responsible. The majority of public appointments, however, are unpaid as most of those who accept a public appointment do so on a voluntary basis.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Capital Modernisation Fund

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the Government's plans for allocating the Unallocated Capital Modernisation Fund moneys as set out in Table 1.4, page 16, of the Scottish Office Departmental report, CM 4215, March 1999. [80291]

Mr. Dewar: Of the £75m unallocated from the Capital Modernisation Fund, I have decided to allocate £4.2m to the elimination of mixed sex accommodation from the NHS in Scotland, and £0.3m to the Highlands and Island Fire Board. The allocation of the balance will be for the Scottish Executive to determine.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Primary Education Funding

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list which local authority areas in Scotland are providing a lower level of education funding per primary school pupil in real terms in 1999–2000 than in 1998–1999. [80677]

Mrs. Liddell: This information is not available centrally.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Senator Pinochet

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will decide whether to issue a second authority to proceed in response to the Spanish extradition request for Senator Pinochet. [80227]

Mr. Straw: I signed a second Authority to Proceed in respect of Senator Pinochet yesterday evening. The Spanish request for his extradition will now be considered by the courts. The reasons for my decision were sent to all the parties concerned in a letter from one of my officials as set out:

"I am writing to inform you that the Secretary of State yesterday evening signed a second Authority to Proceed ("ATP") in respect of Senator Pinochet. The original ATP is being transmitted to Bow Street and a copy, through the Crown Office, to the Divisional Court. I am notifying the Chief Clerk and the head of the Crown Office of this decision by fax. I enclose a copy of the ATP, signed on 14 April 1999, for your information.

2. The Secretary of State is not under an obligation to provide reasons for his decision to sign an ATP. However, in this case, and in the light of the matters raised by the representations, he has agreed to give his reasons at this stage.

3. In deciding to issue the new ATP, the Secretary of State has proceeded as if no previous ATP was in existence, and has considered the matter entirely afresh. He has limited himself to taking account only of considerations which are relevant to the question whether the new ATP should be issued or not.

Representations

4. Although there is no provision in the Extradition Act ("the Act") for representations at this stage in extradition proceedings, the Secretary of State has taken careful account of these in making his decision: in particular, representations made to him by legal representatives of Senator Pinochet; the Spanish Government; the Chilean Government; and legal representatives for "the Interveners" before the House of Lords. He also received material from the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and the Ministry of Defence. To the extent that he has considered previously submitted representations, he has done so having regard to the latest judgment of the House of Lords and only in so far as they had relevance to the question whether a new ATP should be issued.

5. The decision to issue the new Authority to Proceed was taken personally by the Secretary of State, who was satisfied that he took this decision with an open mind.

The House of Lords ruling, 24 March 1999

6. Six of the seven members of the Appellate Committee of the House of Lords stated their view that the Secretary of State should reconsider his decision of 9 December 1998 in the light of the very considerable reduction in the number of extraditable charges from those identified by their ruling on 25 November.

7. The Secretary of State invited the assistance of the Divisional Court in finding a means to quash the first ATP of 9 December 1998, in order to comply with the recommendation of the Appellate Committee of the House of Lords in their latest decision. The Divisional Court indicated on Monday 29 March 1999 that the court could quash the first ATP with the consent of all parties to the proceedings at a hearing shortly after the Secretary of State had taken his decision whether a new ATP should be issued. The necessary procedural steps will be taken in consultation with Senator Pinochet's legal representatives and the Crown Prosecution Service on behalf of Spain.

The Secretary of State's approach to his decision

8. The Secretary of State has taken a fresh decision whether to issue a new ATP under section 7(4) of the Act, which provides:

"On receipt of any such request the Secretary of State may issue an authority to proceed unless it appears to him that an order of the return of the person concerned could not lawfully be made, or would not in fact be made, in accordance with the provisions of this Act."

9. The Secretary of State has taken the approach that if it appears to him at this stage that no order for the return of Senator Pinochet to Spain could lawfully be made, or would in fact be made, then he should not issue a new ATP. If those conditions do not exist, he has a discretion whether or not to issue a new ATP.

10. He has had regard to the relevant extradition arrangement, namely the European Convention on Extradition ("ECE"). The United Kingdom's obligation is to extradite Senator Pinochet to Spain consistently with the ECE. That is a consideration to which the Secretary of State gives particular weight.

11. The Secretary of State has taken his decision having taken account of, in particular, the judgment of the House of Lords of 24 March, and the appropriate and separate roles of the courts and himself in the scheme of the Act. There are various matters which the Secretary of State has considered at this stage which can be the subject of far closer and more satisfactory examination during the court stages of the extradition process (committal and habeas corpus) than is possible at this preliminary stage. In relation to such matters, the Secretary of State considers that it is appropriate for them to be explored in full detail in the court proceedings, after notice of all points has been given to each party to permit argument by that party and (as necessary) the adducing of formal evidence and evidence in answer.

12. In reaching his decision, the Secretary of State has considered the application of the Act to the Spanish request and all the general restrictions on surrender in sections 6 and 12 of the Act.

Extradition crimes

13. The Secretary of State has had well in mind the latest ruling of the House of Lords, to the effect that under United Kingdom law the only extraditable offences referred to in the Spanish request are offences after 8 December 1988.

14. Section 1 of the Act provides that where, as in the case of Spain, extradition procedures under Part III of the Act are available, a person in the United Kingdom who: "is accused in that state of the commission of an extradition crime" may be arrested and returned to that state in accordance with those procedures.

15. The Secretary of State considers that Senator Pinochet is accused, in Spain, of offences in the relevant period equivalent to United Kingdom offences of conspiracy to torture and torture, and that these are extradition crimes.

16. The Secretary of State has taken account of section 9(8) of the Act, and the terms of paragraph 3 of the European Convention on Extradition Order 1990, which provides:

"Where an extradition request is made by a Convention State in respect of a person accused of an offence, it shall not be necessary:

(a) for that State to furnish the court of committal with evidence sufficient to warrant the trial of that person if the extradition crime had taken place within the jurisdiction of that court; or

(b) for the court of committal to be satisfied that there is evidence sufficient to warrant the trial of that person.".

17. The Secretary of State has proceeded on the basis that he is entitled, at this stage of the extradition proceedings against Senator Pinochet, to treat the Spanish request as well-founded as a matter of Spanish law.

Sovereign or diplomatic immunity

18. In light of the latest decision of the House of Lords, the Secretary of State has proceeded on the basis that, in relation to extraditable offences, Senator Pinochet does not enjoy any immunity, save in respect of offences of murder and conspiracy to murder of which he is accused. Senator Pinochet does not enjoy immunity in relation to the extradition crimes of conspiracy to torture and torture referred to above.

19. The Secretary of State has had regard to what is alleged in the request to have happened before 8 December 1988, but only in so far as it is relevant to the criminality of what is alleged to have happened after that date—i.e. in relation to the question whether acts of torture after that date were done in the course of a conspiracy begun before, such as to amount to an accusation of a conspiracy to torture continuing after that date for the purposes of section 7(5) of the Act.

20. The Secretary of State does not accept the argument, put on behalf of Senator Pinochet, that he should be treated as immune unless there is evidence before him to show that Senator Pinochet had actually committed the relevant offences of which he is accused. Nor does the Secretary of State understand the majority of the House of Lords to have ruled (as Senator Pinochet contends) that immunity in respect of torture or conspiracy to torture only ceases to apply where torture is widespread or systematic.

21. It does not appear to the Secretary of State that Senator Pinochet is entitled to diplomatic immunity as the head of a special mission.

Additional Spanish material

22. The Secretary of State was invited, by the Crown Prosecution Service on behalf of Spain, to consider fresh material issued by the fifth Central Magistrate's Court of Madrid, dated 10 December 1998, 24 December 1998, 26 March 1999 and 5 April 1999, subsequent to the formal request received in the Home Office on 11 November 1998. He does not regard the material to be "supplementary material" under Article 13 of the ECE since, as the requested Party in that article, he has not considered it necessary to request such material from Spain in order to make his decision. The Secretary of State has, however, had regard to this material as part of the representations put before him in the context of considering whether (as Senator Pinochet contends) the Spanish accusations are not made and maintained in good faith.

General restrictions

23. The Secretary of State has considered all the general restrictions on surrender in sections 6 and 12 of the Act. In particular, he has had regard to:

Political Offences (section 6(1)(a))

24. Section 24 of the Act provides that no offence to which section 1 of the Suppression of Terrorism Act applies can be regarded as an offence of a political character. Since Spain is a designated country for the purposes of section 24, the Secretary of State considers that all the offences that are to be included in the ATP fall within this provision. In any event, it does not appear to him that the offences charged are of a political character.

Punishment for political opinions (sections 6(1)(c) and (d))

25. The Secretary of State does not consider that there are good grounds for concluding that the request has been issued for this purpose.

The passage of time (section 12(2)(a)(ii))

26. The Secretary of State has not been notified by the Spanish Government that any of the offences for which extradition is sought are time barred from prosecution, and considers that it is reasonable to proceed at this stage on the footing that no relevant time bar appears to apply.

27. Nor does the Secretary of State consider that the passage of time would render it unjust or oppressive to issue an ATP in this case. It does not appear that Senator Pinochet is unfit to stand trial. Although the Secretary of State has had regard to the effect of the latest House of Lords judgment in reducing the number and extent of potential charges, the remaining offences for which return has been sought are serious, and in the nature of those for which, domestically, passage of time would not be regarded as restricting prosecution. The case is an accusation case and, ordinarily, the reliability of witnesses' memories may properly be regarded as a matter for the court of prosecution.

Accusation not made in good faith in the interests of justice (section 12(2)(a)(iii))

28. The Secretary of State does not believe that there are sufficient grounds for concluding the surviving accusations have been made other than in good faith in the interests of justice. The Secretary of State has in mind that this issue can be addressed by the courts under section 11(3)(c) of the Act, and that it is a question, among others, which can be re-examined in the light of any developments at the stage when he comes to exercise his final discretion at the end of the extradition process, under section 12 of the Act.

The Secretary of State's discretion

29. The Secretary of State has considered the ambit of his discretion under section 7(4) and his residual general discretion under section 12 of the Act, which would apply in relation to the return of Senator Pinochet were he to be committed by the Bow Street magistrate under section 9 of the Act. The Secretary of State has been advised that the discretion conferred upon him is wide, and he has, therefore, taken a range of factors into consideration.

30. A large number of points were raised in representations concerning the Secretary of State's discretion, including aspects of issues that fall to be considered under the general restrictions on return contained in the Act. In particular, the Secretary of Sate has had regard to the following:

The change in the ambit of the case against Senator Pinochet

31. The Secretary of State has considered the latest judgment of the House of Lords, and its impact upon the number and extent of the offences for which extradition may be sought, and concluded that the formal request from Spain appears to him to disclose the extradition crimes of torture and conspiracy to torture. He has considered the representations made on behalf of Senator Pinochet alleging that the manner in which the Senator's extradition has been sought constitutes an abuse of the extradition process. The Secretary of State does not consider that at this stage these allegations amount to a sufficient ground not to issue an ATP.

Pending proceedings in Chile

32. Senator Pinochet's legal representatives, and the Chilean Government, argued that the Senator should be returned to Chile where he could stand trial, and that it was artificial to require an extradition request from Chile where such return would be voluntary. However, in the absence of such a request, there is no extradition request from the Chilean Government which the Secretary of State could consider under section 12(5) of the Act. Moreover, there is no provision of international law which excludes Spain's jurisdiction in this matter. The Secretary of State does not consider the possibility of a trial in Chile to be a factor that outweighs the United Kingdom's obligations under the ECE to extradite Senator Pinochet to Spain.

Humanitarian considerations

33. Representations were made on behalf of the Senator that his age and health would render it unjust or oppressive to issue an Authority to Proceed. The Secretary of State has considered these carefully, but concluded that it does not appear that the Senator is unfit to stand trial and concluded that in all the circumstances it would not be unjust or oppressive for him to stand trial in relation to the remaining extraditable offences with which he is charged. The Secretary of State also has in mind that this question, among others, can be re-examined in the light of any developments, at the stage when he comes to exercise his final discretion at the end of the extradition process, under section 12 of the Act.

Other factors

34. The Secretary of State has also considered other factors under his general discretion including:

(i) the possible effect of extradition proceedings on the stability of Chile, and its future democracy; and

(ii) the possible effect of extradition proceedings on the United Kingdom national interest.

35. He has concluded that the material and representations put before him do not amount to sufficient grounds not to issue an ATP.

Conclusion

36. In the event that Senator Pinochet is committed to await the Secretary of State's decision on his return, the Secretary of State will consider the extradition request afresh under section 12 of the Act. At that stage, he will be able to take into account any findings in the committal proceedings and any habeas corpus proceedings as well as any representations which Senator Pinochet may wish to make against return.

37. If Senator Pinochet decides to apply for leave to move for judicial review of the Secretary of State's decision, he reserves the right to expand upon the reasons given in this letter in an affidavit to be sworn by one of his officials."

Women's Prison (Ashford)

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the timetable for building a women's prison at Ashford, Middlesex. [80426]

Mr. George Howarth: The cost of construction and management of the proposed new prison at Ashford will fall outside the period of the current comprehensive spending review. The timetable for its construction will depend upon funding and other priorities within the Prison Service estate.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many parliamentary questions have been tabled to his Department for written answer on a named day since May 1997; and what percentage of them received a substantive reply on that day. [80737]

Mr. Straw: Between 1 May 1997 and 12 April 1999, a total of 2,269 Named Day parliamentary questions were tabled for answer by my Department. Of these, 75.4 per cent. (2,012) received a substantive reply on the day requested.

Prisoners (Hepatitis)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people currently detained in prison are suffering from hepatitis; and what proportion of the prison population this figure represents. [80209]

Mr. George Howarth: The number of prisoners reported by Prison Service establishments as suffering from various forms of hepatitis at 30 September 1998 (the last date for which a complete set of figures is currently available) was:

	Number
Hepatitis A	3
Acute hepatitis B	25
Chronic hepatitis B	75
Chronic hepatitis C	463
Total	566
Prison population	65,913
Proportion of population	0.86%

Prison Sites (Essex)

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is examining potential sites for a prison (a) in Colchester and (b) elsewhere in Essex. [80517]

Mr. George Howarth: No.

Europol

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to the right hon. Member for Penrith and The Border (Mr. Maclean) of 18 March 1999, Official Report, columns 721–22, on Europol, if he will provide a breakdown by category of the types of request submitted by the United Kingdom for information from Europol. [80456]

Kate Hoey: There was a total of 394 requests made by United Kingdom law enforcement agencies during 1998 of which 82.5 per cent. were drug related; 5.6 per cent. were linked to immigration; 8.1 per cent. covered money laundering activities; 3 per cent. were related to trafficking in stolen vehicles and 0.8 per cent. concerned trafficking in human beings.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many parliamentary questions have been tabled to her Department for written answer on a named day since May 1997; and what percentage of them received a substantive reply on that day. [80728]

Clare Short: Since May 1997, 454 questions were tabled to my Department for a written answer on a named day; 95 per cent. received an answer on that day.

Public Appointments

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the public appointments for which her Department is responsible and which carry a fee or salary, indicating for each type of appointment the fee or salary band which applies. [80757]

Clare Short: The only public appointments for which my Department is responsible and for which remuneration is provided are to the Board of the Commonwealth Development Corporation. The information is as follows:

Mr. H. Singhania	500
Dr. J. Kydd	500
Mr. R. Murray	7,500
Professor D. Pearce	7,500
Ms C. Hayman	7,500
Mr. R. Seal	7,500
Mr. P. Kent	7,500

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

IACS Maps

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what cost benefit analysis he has carried out on IACS map checks. [73343]

Mr. Rooker: The programme of map checks was introduced following evaluations undertaken by the European Commission of the Department's arrangements for developing a central IACS database recording details of field areas included in Area Aid Applications in accordance with the requirements of Community legislation. There would have been a risk of significant disallowance of reimbursement of Exchequer expenditure from the European Agricultural Guidance and Guarantee Fund on the schemes to which IACS applies if such checks had not been instituted.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the administrative cost to date to his Department of carrying out IACS map checks. [73290]

Mr. Rooker: The information is not available. A number of checks are undertaken to meet the requirements laid down in Community legislation governing IACS and administrative costs of carrying out IACS map checks between 1994–1998 were not separately recorded.

Pig and Poultry Bonemeal

Mr. Sawford: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to allow the use of pig and poultry bonemeal. [75843]

Mr. Rooker: The existing bans on the use of mammalian meat and bone meal (MBM) in feed for farmed animals and as fertiliser on agricultural land do not extend to MBM derived from poultry.

Representations have been made by the pig industry and the Meat and Livestock Commission (MLC) to allow porcine MBM to be fed to poultry on the condition that processing takes place in rendering plants dedicated to pig waste. The existing ban was put in place on the recommendation of SEAC, and the Government continue to base their handling of BSE on the advice on the Committee.

Before we would be prepared to ask SEAC to look at the use of porcine MBM for export or poultry feed purposes the industry itself will need to address the key issues of how monitoring at all stages of production and distribution would be carried out to avoid the possibility of cross contamination.

Special Advisers

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the total number of occasions when (a) departmental and (b) non-departmental Special Advisers have travelled abroad in an official capacity since 2 May 1997. [76819]

Mr. Nick Brown: Between 2 May 1997 and 28 February 1999, Special Advisers in this Department have made visits overseas on 12 occasions in an official capacity. All travel complied with the requirements of the Ministerial Code and the Civil Service Management Code. Costs are accounted for within the total costs for any overseas trips by Ministers. I have 2 departmental operational advisers and no non-departmental special advisers.

There have been no occasions since 2 May 1997 when Special Advisers in this Department have travelled abroad in an official capacity unaccompanied by Ministers.

Operational Licences

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list for (a) farms and (b) other agriculture-related industries (i) all licences and permits issued by his Department and its agencies to farms or companies enabling them to carry out their business, (ii) the cost of each such licence or permit in (A) 1997–98 and (B) 1999–2000 and (iii) current number of farms or companies which are in receipt of each such licence or permit. [76873]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 16 March 1999]: The 106 authorisations, including those relating to approval or registration of premises enabling farms and other agriculture-related industries to carry out their businesses, have been placed in the Library of the House.

Banana Import Regime

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the basis for maintaining the European Union banana import regime; and when he expects the publication of the arbitrator's report on the matter. [79159]

Mr. Rooker: The EU's banana regime is designed to meet both our commitments to African, Caribbean and Pacific (ACP) countries under the Lomé Convention, Protocol 5 in particular, and our World Trade Organisation (WTO) obligations.

Reports from both the WTO arbitrator and the Dispute Settlement Panel were published on 12 April and copies have been placed in the Library of the House.

Vitamins and Minerals Advisory Group

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to ensure that his ad hoc expert advisory group on vitamins and minerals takes note of the recommendations of the Agriculture Committee's report on vitamin B6 in relation to (a) the quality of scientific advice and (b) the use of safety factors. [79484]

Mr. Rooker: Members of the Expert Group on Vitamins and Minerals are aware of the conclusions and recommendations of the Agriculture Select Committee's report on vitamin B6 and will take these into account in carrying out its remit. The Group will, as a matter of course, give consideration to the use of safety factors and the quality of the available scientific evidence, and I am satisfied they are capable of reaching their own conclusions on these matters.

Genetically Modified Soya

Ms Walley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions (a) he has had and (b) he plans to have with Brazil's Agriculture Minister in respect of genetically modified free soya supplies to the UK; and if he will make a statement. [80557]

Mr. Rooker: I have not met, or have plans to meet, the Brazilian Agriculture Minister to discuss GM soya supplies. This Department has published a list of suppliers of GM free soya for anyone wanting to obtain such material.

Badgers

Mr. Syms: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects his Department's study into the links between TB in cattle and badgers to be published. [80288]

Mr. Rooker: Under the TB strategy I announced on 17 August last year, the links between TB in cattle and badgers will be examined through research and the randomised badger culling trial. The trial is planned to run for five or more years. The research projects, whose details I announced on 10 March 1999, Official Report, columns 301–02, will take between two and five years to complete, and some may provide the basis for further projects. Subject to the need to ensure that premature publication does not jeopardise future work, I envisage that the results will be published as they become available.

Food Safety

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on schemes which promote industry-wide production systems in (a) agriculture and (b) horticulture to demonstrate the safety and traceability of the food produced. [80244]

Mr. Rooker: Industry-wide assurance schemes which go beyond statutory requirements are for the industry to take forward in light of their assessment of prevailing market conditions. I welcome the development of these assurance schemes because they can help provide the consumer with confidence in the integrity of the product.

Genetically Modified Maize

Ms Walley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the suppliers of genetically modified free maize. [80558]

Mr. Rooker: GM maize is not grown commercially in the EU, except for a small amount in Spain and France last year, all of which was used within Spain. Supplies of non-GM maize are thus widely available within Europe and a list of such suppliers is therefore unnecessary.

Honey

Ms Walley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement in respect of measures to prevent contamination of honey by genetically modified material. [80556]

Mr. Rooker: The Advisory Committee on Novel Foods and Processes hosted a workshop in 1991 to consider the safety of pollen from GM plants in honey. The workshop's conclusion was that the consumption of gene products from pollen in honey was likely to be negligible. The results from three research projects commissioned by MAFF to investigate this further subsequently confirmed this conclusion.

Vitamin and Mineral Supplements

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has obtained regarding regulations affecting the sale of higher-dose vitamin and mineral supplements in other European Union member states. [80222]

Mr. Rooker: Legislation on vitamin and mineral supplements varies from member state to member state. In most cases the rules relating to supplements sold under food law are more restrictive than those applying in the United Kingdom and typically limit the permitted level of vitamins and minerals in supplements to the Recommended Daily Amount or a multiple thereof.

Beef Exports (Northern Ireland)

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much beef has been exported from Northern Ireland since the ban was lifted on 16 March 1998. [80180]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 13 April 1999]: There has only been one company involved in the export of beef from Northern Ireland since the lifting of the ban. In these circumstances, I cannot provide the information requested as it is commercial in confidence.

Milk Imports

Mr. Webb: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate the share of the domestic retail milk market currently accounted for by imports; and if he will provide corresponding figures for each of the last 10 years. [79939]

Mr. Rooker: In 1998, it is estimated that imports accounted for 0.8 per cent. of the domestic retail liquid drinking milk market. The corresponding figures for each of the last ten years are shown in the table.

Liquid drinking milk in the United Kingdom

Year	Production[1]	Imports[2]	Exports[2]	Total domestic use	Imports as a percentage of total domestic use
1989	6,921	17	3	6,935	0.3
1990	6,927	21	3	6,945	0.3
1991	6,903	37	3	6,938	0.5
1992	6,980	67	3	7,044	1.0
1993	7,008	54	3	7,059	0.8
1994	6,966	68	4	7,029	1.0
1995	7,128	89	5	7,212	1.2
1996	7,041	68	5	7,104	1.0
1997	6,955	63	6	7,013	0.9
1998	6,942	56	10	6,988	0.8

[1] Production includes liquid drinking milk manufactured in the UK by dairy companies and farms for retail sale. It is not possible to identify separately the products for which imported raw milk is used by dairy companies. It is therefore possible that a small proportion of liquid drinking milk produced in the United Kingdom is manufactured from such imported raw milk.

[2] Overseas trade in liquid milk in immediate packings of a net content not exceeding two litres as shown in the Overseas Trade Statistics. Liquid milk in larger packings is excluded as such trade could be for manufacturing use rather than for retail sale.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Brady: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many parliamentary questions have been tabled to his Department for written answer on a named day since May 1997; and what percentage of them received a substantive reply on that day. [80726]

Mr. Morley: In the period from 1 of May 1997 to 31 March 1999, 1,884 parliamentary questions were tabled to this Department for written answer on a named day. Of these, 53 per cent. received a substantive reply on that day.

Genetically Modified Food

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to publish the paper requested by the Cabinet Sub-Committee on Biotechnology from the Chief Medical Officer and Chief Scientific Adviser on the human health implications of genetically-modified foods. [75419]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: I have been asked to reply.

The Chief Medical Officer and the Chief Scientific Adviser have been asked to advise Ministers on the public health implications of the genetic modification of food. Their work will be conducted in accordance with the Government's Guidelines on "The Use of Scientific Advice in Policy Making", which sets out a framework for ensuring that Government policy is made on the basis of the best scientific advice. Advice from officials to Ministers is not normally published but the possibility of publication in this case will be considered when the advice has been received.

DEFENCE

Departmental Property

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many overseas homes are owned by his Department; what proportion are occupied; and what plans he has to improve the quality of overseas service homes. [77450]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 18 March 1999]: I will write to my hon. Friend and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

No-fly Zones (Iraq)

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many times Iraqi aircraft have violated the no-fly zones (a) in the five years preceding Operation Desert Fox and (b) since the conclusion of Operation Desert Fox; [77229]

(2) how many times allied aircraft have fired at Iraqi aircraft and installations in the no-fly zones when allied aircraft have been initially locked on by Iraqi forces (a) in the five years preceding Operation Desert Fox and (b) since the conclusion of Operation Desert Fox; [77230]

(3) how many times allied aircraft have fired at Iraqi aircraft and installations in the no-fly zones without being initially locked on by Iraqi forces (a) in the five years preceding Operation Desert Fox and (b) since the conclusion of Operation Desert Fox. [77231]

Mr. George Robertson: [holding answer 22 March 1999]: In the five years preceding Operation Desert Fox (16–19 December 1998), Iraqi aircraft violated the no-fly zones on over 80 occasions. RAF aircraft did not fire on any Iraqi aircraft or installations during this time. Since Operation Desert Fox there have been some 120 violations of the no-fly zones, in which Iraqi aircraft have frequently tried to lure our aircraft within range of surface-to-air missile traps.

Our aircraft are routinely illuminated by Iraqi air defence network radars when patrolling the no-fly zones, but radar lock-on is a relatively rare occurrence as it exposes the initiator to the risk of an armed response. The Iraqis more commonly employ other means, including optical guidance, to direct their surface-to-air missiles. Statistics of lock-on occurrences have not been kept. RAF aircraft have attacked Iraqi targets on 15 occasions since Operation Desert Fox, in direct response to sustained attempts to shoot down coalition aircraft and kill aircrew.

Departmental Costs

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost to his Department in each of the last five years of (a) public ceremonial duties and (b) VIP transport. [80710]

Mr. Doug Henderson: This information is not held centrally and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Kosovo

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he has made of the costs to the United Kingdom of current international action relating to the situation in Kosovo. [79917]

Mr. George Robertson: The total cost of military operations relating to Kosovo is impossible to estimate at this stage, given we do not know what Milosevic's next moves will be, and how we will need to respond. The costs will, however, be substantial. Our assessment of costs incurred as of 8 April is some £17 million; this does not include the costs of replenishing stock of ordnance expended.

Service Injuries

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what records are kept by his Department of allegations concerning (a) physical and (b) mental health injuries suffered by former members of the armed forces as a result of their service. [80724]

Mr. Doug Henderson: My Department does not keep records of allegations of physical or mental health injuries suffered by former members of the Armed Forces attributable to their service. However, reported cases of injury are kept on personal medical records of serving members of the HM Forces. My Department also maintains records of common law claims for compensation from existing and former members of the Armed Forces concerning allegations of physical and mental injuries attributable to their Service.

Public Appointments

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the public appointments for which his Department is responsible and which carry a fee or salary, indicating for each type of appointment the fee or salary band which applies. [80753]

Mr. Spellar: "Public Bodies 1998"—copies of which are available in the Library of the House—provides information on the levels of remuneration paid to those serving on the boards of public bodies for which the MOD is responsible.

Since that report was written, the Nuclear Weapons Safety Committee and the Nuclear Powered Warships Safety Committee, which shared the same membership, have amalgamated in 1998, to form the Defence Nuclear Safety Committee, DNSC. The remuneration of DNSC members is identical to that of members of the previous Committees.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many parliamentary questions have been tabled to his Department for written answer on a named day since May 1997; and what percentage of them received a substantive reply on that day. [80732]

Mr. Spellar: According to our records 2,026 Named Day Questions have been tabled to my Department. Information on what percentage of them received a substantive reply could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Our database cannot currently provide that information, however, we are looking at ways to refine it which may enable us to provide such information in the future.

Macpherson Inquiry

Mr. Efford: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the implications for his Department of the Macpherson inquiry recommendations; and if he will make a statement. [80535]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer the Minister for the Cabinet Office, my right hon. Friend the Member for Copeland (Dr. Cunningham), gave him on 14 April 1999, Official Report, columns 239–40.

TREASURY

Road Haulage Industry

16. Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the impact of the increases in diesel duty and vehicle excise duty on the future operations of the road haulage industry. [79460]

Ms Hewitt: In making his Budget judgment, my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer took a wide range of factors into account.

Small Firms

17. Dr. Starkey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement concerning his Budget measures to help small firms. [79461]

Mrs. Roche: The Budget introduced a substantial package of measures for smaller businesses which will stimulate greater investment, innovation and growth within the small business sector and which will ensure that the sector is an important source of dynamism, innovation and competition for the economy as a whole.

Debt Relief

18. Ms Drown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to press for higher levels of debt cancellation at the forthcoming meetings of the IMF and the World Bank. [79462]

Ms Hewitt: The Chancellor intends to take the opportunity at the Spring Meetings of the IMF/World Bank later this month to take forward his recent initiative on poverty reduction in the developing world, calling for faster, deeper and wider debt relief.

National Insurance Fund

19. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has for the future of the Treasury supplement to the national insurance fund. [79463]

Mr. Milburn: In 1999–2000, we expect benefit expenditure from the National Insurance Fund broadly to match income, in which case the Fund will not need a substantial Treasury Grant. The maximum Treasury Grant which may be made available to the Fund in this financial year shall not exceed 2 per cent. of the estimated benefit expenditure from the Fund. For subsequent years, we will decide on the level of Treasury Grant in light of advice from the Government Actuary.

Withholding Tax

20. Mr. Flight: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his policy on the use of the British veto in respect of EC proposals for a common withholding tax. [79464]

Dawn Primarolo: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Gordon (Mr. Bruce) on 2 March 1999, Official Report, column 640.

Working Families Tax Credit

21. Mr. Stringer: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received on the working families tax credit. [79465]

Dawn Primarolo: The Chancellor has received a number of very helpful and constructive representations which have informed the development of WFTC and DPTC. And I have also had useful meetings with representative groups. In addition, the Inland Revenue continue to consult on a regular basis with a wide range of interested parties, on the details of the scheme and its administration.

30. Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to evaluate the impact of the working families tax credit. [79474]

Dawn Primarolo: The Government believe that the WFTC will create a strong new incentive for people with children to move into work and up the earnings scale, and provide a welcome boost to the incomes of low and middle income families with children. We naturally want to assess the effects of the new policy and ensure that it is achieved in the most effective way. We will therefore be carrying out a full evaluation of the impact of the WFTC.

Public Sector Debt

22. Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his policy towards net public sector debt. [79466]

Mr. Milburn: The Government's Sustainable Investment Rule requires that public sector net debt as a proportion of GDP be held over the economic cycle at a stable and prudent level. The projections contained in Budget '99 show net public debt falling below 40 per cent. of GDP this year and to around 35 per cent. of GDP by 2003–04.

Family-friendly Policies

23. Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what measures he has put in place to help make work pay for parents balancing work and home responsibilities. [79467]

Dawn Primarolo: The Government place a high priority on policies designed to enable parents balance work and family life. The reforms to income tax and National Insurance Contributions, the National Minimum Wage and the introduction of Working Families Tax Credit (WFTC) from October 1999 with the generous child care tax credit will make work pay for parents and tackle the unemployment trap. At the same time the increased generosity of the WFTC will mean that parents, whether single or a couple, have greater choice in deciding who works and how much.

Tax Revenue

24. Mr. Amess: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the amount of tax revenue to be received between 1997–98 and 2001–02 from measures introduced since May 1997. [79468]

Dawn Primarolo: Table B9 of the Financial Statement and Budget Report shows forecasts of taxes and social security contributions, net of tax credits, as a per cent. of GDP, after taking into account measures introduced since May 1997. Forecasts of taxes and social security contributions, net of tax credits, in cash terms are published in Table B10. Forecasts of money GDP are published in Table B4.

Economic and Monetary Union

25. Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has for discussions with the Governor of the European Central Bank and the Commission about the Maastricht conditions on currency stability and how they apply to the UK's adoption of the euro. [79469]

Ms Hewitt: The Chancellor of the Exchequer has regular discussions on a range of economic issues with Central Bank Governors from other countries, including representatives from the euro-area, and the European Commission.

The Government's new framework for macroeconomic policy provides the best platform to deliver greater exchange rate stability.

29. Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the cost to the United Kingdom Government of conversion from sterling to the euro. [79473]

Ms Hewitt: The cost to the Government of conversion to the euro would depend on the detailed approach that the public sector took to the changeover. The outline National Changeover Plan is a first step in planning how the UK would make the changeover to the single currency. A further plan will be published in around a year's time.

32. Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the timing of any referendum on British entry into economic and monetary union. [79476]

Ms Hewitt: The Government's Outline National Changeover Plan published on 23 February 1999 explained that, if the Government decide to recommend joining the single currency and Parliament agrees, the speed at which the UK could move to a referendum would depend on how quickly the practical arrangements for a referendum could be put in place. The minimum period in which the UK could move from a decision by Government to a referendum is about 4 months.

National Changeover Plan

26. Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to support small businesses in connection with the national changeover plan. [79470]

Ms Hewitt: In developing the changeover plan, the Government have consulted extensively with key representatives from the SME sector, such as the British Chambers of Commerce, the Forum of Private Business, and the Federation of Small Business. We are very grateful for the constructive help and support they have given to the planning process.

The Treasury's Euro Preparations Unit will continue to provide practical help and training via the many business intermediaries, such as Business Link, who have been assisting SMEs to prepare for the euro's introduction.

Employer-provided Transport (Taxation)

27. Mr. Peter Bradley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will review the Inland Revenue's policy in respect of current tax demands to employers providing public transport for their work force. [79471]

Dawn Primarolo: I am sure my hon. Friend welcomes the tax reliefs for green transport benefits announced in the Budget; these include exemptions for employer provided large works buses, and for subsidies to local public bus services, to get employees to and from work. These reliefs take effect from 6 April 1999. I am afraid there are no grounds for ignoring tax payable under the law applying to benefits for previous years.

Pesticide Tax

28. Mr. Sawford: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received on the Government's proposals for a pesticide tax. [79472]

Ms Hewitt: The Government have received a number of representations on the subject of a possible tax or charge on the use of pesticides.

A research report commissioned by the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions on the possible design and impact of a tax or charge on pesticides was published on 24 March, with a list of consultative questions. The Government will consider carefully the views expressed on a number of issues raised in the report in deciding how best to proceed.

Income and Wealth Disparities

31. Mr. Gapes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to use the tax system and other measures to reduce disparities of income and wealth. [79475]

Dawn Primarolo: The Government are committed to building a fairer society in which everyone has the opportunity to fulfil their potential and enjoy the benefits of high and stable levels of economic growth. The Working Families Tax Credit, the 10p tax rate, increased support for children and changes to the National Insurance system, among others, will increase the fairness of the tax system and encourage work incentives.

The Government's strategy for tackling poverty and social exclusion, which will be set out in detail in a report later this year, is based around investment in prevention, work as the best way out of poverty, help for those who cannot work, and regeneration of the poorest communities.

Women (Impact of Budget)

33. Jackie Ballard: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the impact of the Budget on women. [79477]

Dawn Primarolo: This Budget builds on the series of measures of particular benefit to women already implemented since we came to office. Women gain from this Budget right across the income distribution. This Budget demonstrates this Government's commitment to ensuring that women get a fair deal out of the tax and benefits system.

Pensioners

34. Ms Ward: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from pensioner organisations on his Budget announcements on (a) the winter fuel allowance and (b) the minimum pension guarantee; and if he will make a statement. [79478]

Ms Hewitt: The announcement of the fivefold increase in the winter fuel allowance, which will give £100 to every eligible pensioner household this coming winter, and the decision to uprate the minimum income guarantee for pensioners by earnings rather than prices in April 2000, have been generally welcomed.

Cider Duties

35. Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received on his policy regarding duties on cider. [79480]

Mrs. Roche: I have received a number of representations about cider duties including letters from members of the public. In the run up to the Budget I received a formal submission from the National Association of Cider Markers and subsequently met them on 24 February to hear their case.

Child Maintenance Payments

36. Mr. McCabe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the impact of the Budget on those who claim tax relief on child maintenance payments. [79481]

Dawn Primarolo: The tax relief for maintenance payments introduced by the last Government in 1988 is not a relief for child maintenance. It is a relief for payments made to a former husband or wife following separation or divorce. The former husband or wife may use the payments they receive to maintain a child, but equally the relief applies where there is no child in the family.

The Inland Revenue estimate that the tax relief will be worth an average of £220 in the tax year 1999–2000, before it is withdrawn from 2000–01. This includes the transitional relief for those paying under maintenance arrangements set up before 15 March 1988.

Taxes

37. Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the effect on the level of taxes which will be paid in 1999–2000 of the measures in the three Budgets since July 1997. [79482]

Dawn Primarolo: Table B9 of the Financial Statement and Budget Report shows forecasts of taxes and social security contributions, net of tax credits, as a per cent. of GDP, after taking into account measures introduced since May 1997. Forecasts of taxes and social security contributions, net of tax credits, in cash terms are published in Table B10. Forecasts of money GDP are published in Table B4.

Income Tax Credits

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the level of taxation in 2001–02 if income tax credits are accounted for as expenditure rather than as negative taxation. [79451]

Mr. Milburn: On any definition, taxes are expected to be lower in 2001–02 than planned by the previous Government in their last Budget.

Financial Services and Markets Bill

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 22 March 1999, Official Report, column 97, for what reasons his answer did not list the jurisdictions referred to in paragraph 2–2 of the Financial Services and Markets Bill Progress report, published by Her Majesty's Treasury in March. [78973]

Ms Hewitt: Treasury officials discuss many matters of common interest with colleagues from overseas administrations regularly, but generally on the basis that these are private discussions.

Income Tax (Pensioners)

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the number and proportion of pensioners who would pay (a) no income tax and (b) income tax at (i) 10 per cent., (ii) 20 per cent., (iii) 23 per cent. and (iv) 40 per cent. in 1999–2000 or the latest year for which figures are available if people aged over 65 years received only the basic personal tax allowance. [78974]

Dawn Primarolo: Estimates for 1999–2000 are given in the table.

	Excluding age related personal allowance		Including age related personal allowance as enhanced in the Budget
Marginal rate of tax	Number of pensioners[1] (thousands)	Proportion (percentage)	Number of pensioners (thousands)	Proportion (percentage)
Non-taxpayer	6,100	57	7,000	65
10 per cent.	550	5	450	4
20 per cent.	750	7	750	7
23 per cent.	3,150	29	2,350	22
40 per cent.	150	1	150	1
Total	10,700		10,700

[1] Women aged 60 and over and men aged 65 and over

Renewable Energy

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions he has had with colleagues at the DTI and DETR about the potential economic benefits of renewable energy in connection with the preparation of the Government review. [79546]

Ms Hewitt: As Minister responsible for environmental issues including renewable energy in the Treasury, I have had a number of discussions with colleagues in the run up to the publication of the Renewables Review consultation document.

Road Fuel Duty

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the amount of extra revenue arising from the increase in road fuel duty in his Budget statement, including the added effects of VAT, which will come from Scotland. [79321]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 30 March 1999]: The Revenue consequence of the road fuel duty changes in the 1999 Budget is set out in Table 1.11 of the FSBR. The share of oil deliveries made in Scotland is set out in the 1998 Digest of United Kingdom Energy Statistics.

Widow's Bereavement Allowance

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many widows bereaved in each of the five years after 5 April 2000 he estimates will no longer be able to claim widow's bereavement allowance; and what total amount they will lose in relation to previous entitlement as a result; [79438]

(2) what estimate he has made of the savings to be achieved as a result of the abolition of the widow's bereavement allowance. [79437]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 30 March 1999]: It is estimated that around 220,000 widows claim the widow's bereavement allowance each year, in respect of a bereavement in that or the previous year. In 1999–2000, the allowance is £1,970, given at the rate of 10 per cent., but only three quarters of claimants—170,000—have sufficient income to use the allowance. The full year revenue effects of withdrawing the allowance is estimated to be £30 million in 2001–02. Separate estimates are not available for subsequent years.

Medical Insurance (Age Discrimination)

Dr. Cable: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will seek to reduce age discrimination by private medical insurance providers. [80202]

Ms Hewitt: It is for insurers to decide which factors to take into account in assessing risk and pricing insurance products.

Official Statistics

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects to publish a White Paper on the future framework for official statistics. [79903]

Ms Hewitt: The Government produced a Green Paper "Statistics: A Matter of Trust" last year which set out options for achieving its goal of enhancing the integrity, both actual and perceived, of official status.

We will be bringing forward plans in this area as soon as they are finalised.

Employment

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 23 March 1999, Official Report, column 205, on employment, what is the impact on employment of a 1 per cent. increase in employment costs stemming from Government legislative requirements, unmatched by productivity changes. [79915]

Ms Hewitt: The Government have introduced a comprehensive set of policies aimed at promoting employment and incentives to work. Government legislative requirements have been designed with these aims in mind and, taken together, are not expected to raise employment costs.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 23 March 1999, Official Report, column 205, on employment, if he will estimate the impact of a 1 per cent. increase in wages on employment levels from supply side pressures, where there is no compensatory increase in productivity. [79914]

Ms Hewitt: Reductions in labour supply would tend to be associated with higher wage rates and lower employment. In contrast, Government policies are aimed at increasing labour supply and employment by promoting work incentives.

Energy Tax

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to exempt renewable energy from an energy tax levied on business. [79863]

Ms Hewitt: Customs and Excise issued a consultation document on 9 March on the design and administration issues relating to the climate change levy. The consultation document asks for views on whether and, if so, how it might be possible to offer tax relief to electricity generated from renewable sources of energy.

As made clear in the consultation document, there are a number of technical difficulties that would have to be overcome, including identifying the amount of electricity supplied from renewable sources under current electricity pool arrangements. The Government would welcome views on these issues.

As indicated in the Financial Statement and Budget Report, the Government also intend to provide an additional £50 million a year from 2001–02 for schemes aimed at promoting energy efficiency and support for renewable sources of energy, like solar and wind power.

Gift Aid Scheme

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will ensure that telephone inquiries in respect of the gift aid scheme are given information about smaller and regional charities. [R] [80029]

Ms Hewitt: The Gift Aid 2000 campaign is designed to raise awareness of the Millennium Gift Aid scheme, which provides tax relief for donations to UK charities to support education and anti-poverty projects in the world's 80 poorest countries. It is proposed to extend the scheme to provide also for the relief of poverty of refugees from designated countries and to designate Kosovo.

People who ring the Gift Aid 2000 telephone number can choose up to three charities to benefit from their donation. If a donor requires assistance in choosing a charity, the operator will suggest some for the donor's approval. These are randomly selected by computer, either from a list of charities working in a part of the world or on a charitable activity nominated by the donor, or from the complete list of participating charities. All participating charities have an equal chance.

UK Abatement

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the effect on the UK abatement of the exclusion of annual pre-accession expenditure for each of the next eight years. [80014]

Ms Hewitt: I refer the hon. Member to the statement made by the Prime Minister on 29 March 1999, Official Report, columns 731–47.

Birth Weights

Mr. Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the percentage of live and stillborn births in the United Kingdom, where birth weight was (a) under 2,500 grammes and (b) under 3,000 grammes in each of the past five years. [80392]

Ms Hewitt: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Frank Field, dated 15 April 1999:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your recent parliamentary question on births.

Unemployment

Mr. Cox: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the number of (a) men and (b) women, living in England and Wales who are at present unemployed and are aged (i) 50 to 55 years, (ii) 55 to 60 years and (iii) 60 to 65 years. [80643]

Ms Hewitt: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 15 April 1999:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your recent parliamentary question on unemployment in England and Wales.

The table below shows the latest estimates from the Autumn 1998 (September-November) Labour Force Survey (LFS), the ONS measure of unemployment. This is defined on a consistent and internationally recognised basis set out by the International Labour Organisation (ILO) and counts as unemployed people who are: a) without a paid job; b) available to start work within the next two weeks and c) have either looked for work in the last four weeks or are waiting to start a job already obtained. Estimates are not seasonally adjusted.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Brady: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many parliamentary questions have been tabled to his Department for written answer on a named day since May 1997; and what percentage of them received a substantive reply on that day. [80740]

Ms Hewitt: Of the 2,320 questions tabled for answer on a named day, 733 (32 per cent.) were answered substantively on that day. Approximately 60 per cent. of all named day questions were answered within two days of the due day.

Vehicle Excise Duty

Mr. Randall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the level of vehicle excise duty for a 40 tonne lorry in the United Kingdom in 1998–99. [79445]

Ms Hewitt: Vehicles plated to operate at 40 tonnes on 5 axles were first allowed on UK roads on 1 January 1999. They cause over 30 per cent. more road damage than 5 axle vehicles operating at 38 tonnes, the previous maximum weight. Therefore, my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced in his March Budget statement that vehicle excise duty for such lorries plated at 40 tonnes would be set at £5,750 strongly to discourage their use at this weight.

In light of the environmental impact the Chancellor also announced in his Budget Statement that vehicle excise duty for 41 tonne, 6 axle lorries, which cause considerably less road damage, has been set at £2,500.

WALES

Rainfall Statistics

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will list the daily rainfall figures since 1 January 1998 at (a) the Clywedog Dam, (b) Lake Vyrnwy and (c) the Welshpool measurement centre; and if he will make a statement; [80715]

(2) what the flow measurements were from 1 January 1998 to 1 April 1999 on (a) the Clywedog Dam, (b) the dam at Lake Vyrnwy and (c) the River Severn below the Nescliffe Brook; and if he will make a statement; [80688]

(3) what the daily water levels were from 1 January 1998 to 1 April 1999 at (a) the Clywedog Dam and (b) the dam at Lake Vyrnwy; and if he will make a statement. [80716]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: These data are collected by the Environment Agency. I have asked the Environment Agency Wales' General Manager to send this information to the hon. Member. A copy of his reply will be placed in the Library of the House.

Public Appointments

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the public appointments for which his Department is responsible and which carry a fee or salary, indicating for each type of appointment the fee or salary band which applies. [80761]

Mr. Michael: "Public Bodies 1998", copies of which are available in the Library of the House, provides information on the levels of remuneration paid to those serving on the boards of public bodies for which my Department is responsible. In addition my Department publishes a quarterly report containing details of public appointments for which I have responsibility. A copy of this report is also available in the Library of the House. The majority of public appointments are unpaid, as most of those who accept a public appointment do so on a voluntary basis.

Responsibility for making public appointments in Wales will transfer to the National Assembly.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many parliamentary questions have been tabled to his Department for written answer on a named day since May 1997; and what percentage of them received a substantive reply on that day. [80742]

Mr. Michael: The number of Named Day parliamentary questions tabled since 1 May 1997 is 824, of which 91.5% received a substantive reply on that day.

HEALTH

Ambulance Visits (Bedfordshire)

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the (a) frequency of visits and (b) costs of visits, by ambulance personnel to nursing homes and residential homes in Mid-Bedfordshire in cases where an elderly person fell and staff were unable to assist in the last year for which figures are available. [80488]

Mr. Hutton: The information requested is not available centrally.

Frail Elderly (Bedfordshire)

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many frail elderly Mid-Bedfordshire residents are currently accommodated in acute hospitals. [80482]

Mr. Hutton: The information requested is not available centrally.

Residential Care (Bedfordshire)

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the occupancy levels in nursing homes and residential homes within Mid-Bedfordshire in the last year for which figures are available. [80462]

Mr. Hutton: The information requested is readily available only at local social services authority/health authority level. The latest average occupancy rate for nursing homes in Bedfordshire health authority is 80 per cent. at 31 March 1997. The most recent estimated average occupancy rate for Bedfordshire local authority is 90 per cent. over the period 1 April 1997 to 31 March 1998.

Tobacco Control

Mr. Singh: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what level of financial and human resources has the Government committed in support of the work of the International Framework Convention on Tobacco Control. [80484]

Ms Jowell: We are committed to co-operating with other Governments in the establishment of an international framework convention on tobacco control. The White Paper "Smoking Kills" indicated our support for the World Health Organisation's work on the convention and we are discussing with WHO how we can most effectively help them.

It is too early to say what resources will be necessary or will be made available.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many parliamentary questions have been tabled to his Department for written answer on a named day since May 1997; and what percentage of them received a substantive reply on that day. [80731]

Ms Jowell: 2,543 Parliamentary Questions have been tabled to this Department on a Named Day since May 1997. Of these 2,185, or 86 per cent., have been answered substantively on that day.

Public Appointments

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the public appointments for which his Department is responsible and which carry a fee or salary, indicating for each type of appointment the fee or salary band which applies. [80754]

Mr. Denham: Information on the public appointments for which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is responsible, and the levels of remuneration payable, is contained in the Department of Health Public Appointments Annual Report. The Report is currently being prepared for all those in post at 1 March 1999 and will be published in June. Copies of last year's report, giving details of those appointed at 1 March 1998 and the levels of remuneration then payable, is in the Library.

CABINET OFFICE

Civil Servants (Wales)

Ms Julie Morgan: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how many black and other ethnic minority people are employed in the Civil Service in Wales; what percentage they are of all civil servants in Wales; how many are in each grade; and what percentage they are of each grade. [80197]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: At least 290 civil servants of ethnic minority origin were employed in Wales on 1 April 1998, 1.4 per cent. of staff whose ethnic origin is known. The table shows the breakdown by responsibility level.

Public Inquiries

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what proposals the Government have to introduce changes to speed up the process of public inquiries. [79888]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: On 31 March, my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Regions, Regeneration and Planning announced how the Government proposed to proceed with their proposals to improve the efficiency of planning appeal procedures, whether handled by written representations, hearings or public inquiries. He also announced challenging new targets for the Planning Inspectorate for handling planning appeals by written representations, hearings and inquiries.

The Government will be issuing shortly a consultation paper on ways in which the handling of major infrastructure projects of national importance might be improved. The Government have also published a Consultation Document on Transport Safety, as announced on 31 March 1999, Official Report, columns 759–63, which notes the tensions there can sometimes be in the relationship between accident investigations and inquiries, and the pursuit of legal proceedings, and invites views on the right balance to be struck.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Brady: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how many parliamentary questions have been tabled to his Department for written answer on a named day since May 1997; and what percentage of them received a substantive reply on that day. [80734]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: For the purpose of this answer, questions tabled to me as the Minister for the Cabinet Office and Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster and to my predecessor my right hon. Friend the Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark) have been aggregated. Details relating to my right hon. Friend the Member for Hartlepool (Mr. Mandelson) for his period as Minister without Portfolio have been recorded separately.

The figures for the number of named day parliamentary questions tabled to this Department and the percentage which received a substantive reply on the due date from 1 May 1997 to 31 March 1999 are as follows:

Minister for the Cabinet Office and Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster

Total named day parliamentary questions tabled: 317

Percentage receiving a substantive answer on the due date: 74

Minister without Portfolio

Total named day parliamentary questions tabled: 223

Percentage receiving a substantive answer on the due date: 56.

Public Appointments

Mr. Brady: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will list the public appointments for which his Department is responsible and which carry a fee or salary, indicating for each type of appointment the fee or salary band which applies. [80751]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: "Public Bodies 1998"—copies of which are available in the Libraries of the House—provides information on the levels of remuneration paid to those serving on the boards of public bodies for which my Department is responsible. The majority of public appointments, however, are unpaid as most of those who accept a public appointment do so on a voluntary basis.

Political Advisers

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will list the numbers of, and salary bill for, political advisers on the latest date for which information is available; and if he will make a statement. [80114]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: There are currently 67 Special Advisers in post. The total pay bill for Special Advisers in 1998–99, including pension contributions, was £3.5 million.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Brady: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department how many parliamentary questions have been tabled to his Department for written answer on a named day since May 1997; and what percentage of them received a substantive reply on that day. [80738]

Mr. Hoon: According to Departmental records, 454 parliamentary questions for written answer on a named day were tabled to the Lord Chancellor's Department between May 1997 and the end of March 1999; of these, 409, or 90 per cent. received a substantive reply on that day.

Public Appointments

Mr. Brady: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the public appointments for which his Department is responsible and which carry a fee or salary, indicating for each type of appointment the fee or salary band which applies. [80747]

Mr. Hoon: "Public Bodies 1998"—copies of which are available in the Library of the House—provides information on the levels of remuneration paid to those serving on the boards of the non-departmental public bodies for which my Department is responsible. The majority of public appointments, however, are unpaid as most of those who accept a public appointment do so on a voluntary basis.

Uninsured Driving

Mr. Caplin: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will consult on allowing magistrates to impose a wider range of sentences on people convicted of driving without insurance. [80472]

Mr. Boateng: I have been asked to reply.

Driving without insurance is a summary only offence which currently attracts a maximum penalty of a Level 5 (£5,000) fine and an automatic endorsement of the offender's driving licence of between 6 and 8 points. The court may also disqualify the offender from driving.

The Government are aware of concern about both the maximum penalty available and the sentences which are imposed in practice. The Home Office has therefore sought the views of the Magistrates' Association on this issue. The Association's response is currently under consideration.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Joint Consultative Committee

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer to the right hon. Member for Penrith and The Border (Mr. Maclean) of 22 February 1999, Official Report, column 197, if he will list the range of common foreign and security policy issues covered by the proposed extension of the remit of the Joint Consultative Committee; and what documents will be available to members of the Committee. [80179]

Ms Quin: Under its revised remit, the Joint Consultative Committee will discuss, in the light of the Maastricht and Amsterdam Treaties, the most effective means of realising a Common Foreign and Security Policy. It will examine the development of policy through the adoption of EU Common Strategies, Common Positions and Joint Actions, and the need for greater co-ordination and co-operation in European Defence, with particular reference to the relationship between the EU, NATO and the WEU. The Joint Consultative Committee will make proposals as appropriate.

Documents are prepared as required for meetings of the Joint Consultative Committee.

Senator Pinochet

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the content of the reports received between 16 and 20 October from the British Embassy at Madrid, on the investigations into Senator Pinochet in Spain; and if he will make a statement. [80406]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: For details of the report from our Embassy in Madrid on 16 October, I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the right hon. Member for Penrith and The Border (Mr. Maclean) on 2 February 1999, Official Report, columns 597–98. On 19 October 1998, the Embassy dispatched two reports, commenting on Spanish reactions to the arrest of Senator Pinochet and on Judge Garzon's intentions as regards making an early visit to London to interview him.

South Africa

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps his Department is taking to assist in the conduct of free and fair elections in South Africa in June 1999. [80217]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: In response to an invitation from the South African Independent Electoral Commission (IEC), the FCO will send a small team of observers to the South African elections on 2 June.

Economic Community of West African States

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what support his Department is giving to the moratorium on the import, export and manufacture of light weapons adopted by the Economic Community of West African States in October 1998. [80503]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The Government fully support the ECOWAS moratorium on light weapons.

The moratorium applies to the import, export and manufacture of pistols, rifles, submachine guns, carbines, machine guns, anti-tank missiles, mortars and howitzers up to a calibre of 85mm and ammunition and spare parts for the above.

A Code of Conduct was agreed by ECOWAS Member States on 24 March 1999 regarding the implementation of the moratorium. If an ECOWAS Member State believes it has a valid reason for an exemption to the moratorium, the Code states that the ECOWAS Executive Secretariat should be involved in the consultation process. Similarly for proposed imports of weapons for peacekeeping operations, the Code states that the ECOWAS Secretariat should be notified.

The Government will take the provisions of the moratorium and the ECOWAS Code of Conduct fully into account when assessing relevant export licence applications.

The summary of Government Commitments on the application of Strategic Export Controls has been updated to reflect the moratorium and copies have been placed in the Library of the House.

The UK will brief participating states to the Wassenaar Arrangement on the moratorium, and our policy towards it, at the next Wassenaar Arrangement General Working Group meeting.

The UK is also financially supporting the moratorium. The Department for International Development has pledged $500,000 over three years to assist the UNDP in the implementation of the moratorium. We are also considering how the UK might help ECOWAS administer the moratorium.

General Affairs Council

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to announce in advance the agenda for the General Affairs Council where an agenda has been prepared in draft form. [80018]

Ms Quin: I refer the right hon. Member to the answers I gave him on 3 March 1999, Official Report, column 773, and on 26 March 1999, Official Report, column 427. Every month, I give the House details of the items expected on the agendas of the Council of Ministers during the following month. For example, I outlined the draft agenda of the March General Affairs Council on 25 February 1999, Official Report, column 440–46.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many parliamentary questions have been tabled to his Department for written answer on a named day since May 1997; and what percentage of them received a substantive reply on that day. [80739]

Ms Quin: Our existing database does not allow us to compile the information requested without incurring disproportionate cost in its retrieval; however, its replacement will.

Since 1 May 1997, we have issued 436 holding replies.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Education Funding

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how much was spent per pupil in (i) Derbyshire, (ii) Nottinghamshire, (iii) Staffordshire, (iv) Surrey and (v) Hertfordshire in (a) primary schools and (b) secondary schools in each of the last five years at constant prices from all public sources of funds. [79363]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 30 March 1999]: The following table shows net institutional expenditure on LEA maintained schools for the years 1993–94 to 1997–98, the latest year for which figures are available. Figures have been calculated using December 1998 Gross Domestic Product deflators. The table also shows notional figures for 1998–99 and 1999–2000, based on an assumption that the expenditure of the authorities in question in 1997–98 escalates at the same rate as their respective SSA increases for those years.

Book Allowance

Mr. David Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many state schools will not receive the full £2,000 book allowance announced in the Chancellor of the Exchequer's Budget statement on 9 March, because they have fewer than 100 pupils on roll; and what estimate he has made of the extra cost of granting such schools the fixed £2,000 rather than the £20 per pupil currently allocated. [79887]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 13 April 1999]: Around 20,000 schools will receive £2,000. There are around 4,000 schools with fewer than 100 pupils which will receive £20 per pupil. It would cost a further £3.1 million to allocate £2,000 each to these schools.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many parliamentary questions have been tabled to his Department for written answer on a named day since May 1997; and what percentage of them received a substantive reply on that day. [80736]

Mr. Mudie: Between 1 May 1997 and 13 April, 2,002 parliamentary questions have been tabled to the Department for written answer on a named day, 75 per cent. received a substantive reply on that day.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what the cost of (a) the 3.5 per cent. pay award for all teachers and (b) the higher awards for head teachers announced in February 1999 will be in 1999–2000; and if he will list for the current year the pay increases due to head teachers and the dates on which they will become payable. [80675]

Ms Estelle Morris: The cost in 1999–2000 of the general teachers' pay award in England will be £397 million, and the estimated additional cost of headteacher pay restructuring will be £14 million.

All headteachers received a pay increase of 3.5 per cent. on 1 April. Pay increases due to individual headteachers on 1 September 1999 will vary, but average percentage increases according to current school size group are estimated to be as follows:

New Deal (Young People)

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how much of the windfall tax allocation for the New Deal for 18 to 24-year-olds was spent in 1998–99 in total; and what percentage of that total was spent on (a) administration of the scheme, (b) Gateway provision and (c) provision of options. [80679]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Final expenditure on the New Deal for 18 to 24-year-olds in 1998–99 is not yet available. I will write to the hon. Member as soon as the information is available and will place a copy of my letter in the Library.

School Budgets

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the local education authorities (a) in England and (b) in Wales whose aggregate schools budget will provide less funding in real terms per pupil in 1999–2000 than 1998–1999. [80678]

Ms Estelle Morris: Local education authorities are currently in the process of submitting details of their budget proposals for the financial year 1999–2000 to the Department. I will write to the hon. Member when the figures he requests are available, and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library. These figures will also be published in the next few months, alongside tables showing the level of each local education authority's expenditure on its schools. Responsibility for schools in Wales rests with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when were the deadlines for (a) the preparation of budgets under the fair funding system for their submission to his Department and (b) notifying schools of their budget share; and if he will list each local education authority in England that has failed to meet either of these deadlines. [80674]

Ms Estelle Morris: Local eduction authorities are required to publish their budget statements and to notify schools of their budget shares before the beginning of the financial year to which they relate. The following local authorities published their budget statements for the 1999–2000 financial year by the appointed time:

Barnet
Brent
Brighton and Hove
Kingston-upon-Hull
Kingston-upon-Thames
Redbridge
Southend
South Gloucestershire
Trafford.

Information about the dates on which local education authorities notify their schools of their budget shares is not collected centrally.

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list for each local education authority in England for the most recent year for which information is available the total budgeted expenditure (a) within the local schools' budget and (b) within the individual school's budget. [80673]

Ms Estelle Morris: The local schools budget and individual schools budget are being introduced for the financial year 1999–2000. Local education authorities are currently in the process of submitting details of their budget proposals for 1999–2000 to the Department. I will write to the hon. Member when the figures he requests are available, and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library. These figures will also be published in the next few months, alongside tables showing the level of each local education authority's expenditure on its schools.

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will state for each local education authority in England for the financial year 1999–2000 the budgeted expenditure per pupil (a) within the local schools' budget and (b) within the individual school's budget. [80672]

Ms Estelle Morris: Local education authorities are currently in the process of submitting details of their budget proposals for the financial year 1999–2000 to the Department. I will write to the hon. Member when the figures he requests are available, and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Euro

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Wirral, South (Mr. Chapman) of 24 March 1999, Official Report, column 283, what factors underlie her assessment that the impact of the euro on north-south relationships in the island of Ireland in the short term is likely to be limited. [80176]

Mr. Paul Murphy: Over the past two decades, North-South trade has been subject to exchange rate risk and business is therefore used to dealing with this. Many retail businesses in border areas currently transact using both currencies. Also the volume of North-South trade is unlikely to change significantly in the short term, due to the continuing importance of the Great Britain market to Northern Ireland.

Treaty of Amsterdam

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list each of the new responsibilities which she will assume when the signed Treaty of Amsterdam takes effect and for each (a) the likely effect on departmental staffing, (b) the bodies or persons in the European Union principally concerned and (c) the relevant section of that treaty and the consolidated treaties of the European Union and European Community. [80411]

Marjorie Mowlam: The Treaty of Amsterdam will have minimal impact on the responsibilities of the Department and its staffing.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on the impact in Northern Ireland of the proposals in the Government's consultation paper, New and Renewable Energy-Prospects for the 21st Century. [80240]

Mr. Ingram: The Government intend working towards a target of renewable energy providing 10% of UK electricity supplies, cost effectively, as soon as possible; they hope to achieve this by 2010. So the proposals in the consultation paper will stimulate further interest in the potential of renewable technologies in Northern Ireland and complement the current range of initiatives such as the Northern Ireland Non-Fossil Fuel Obligation Orders (NI-NFFOs 1 and 2), the EU supported Energy Demonstration Scheme, the INTERREG programme and Northern Ireland Electricity's Eco Energy (Green Tariff) scheme. Following appraisal of the regional responses to the consultation paper, consideration will be given to the implications for sustained promotion of renewable technologies in Northern Ireland.

Public Appointments

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list the public appointments for which her Department is responsible and which carry a fee or salary, indicating for each type of appointment the fee or salary band which applies. [80756]

Mr. Paul Murphy [holding answer 15 April 1999]: The information requested is contained in the Cabinet Office publication "Public Bodies 1998", copies of which are available in the Library of the House. Since publication, the following public bodies have been created:

Body	Date	Remuneration per annum
The NI Human Rights Commission (its predecessor was the NI Standing Advisory Commission on Human Rights (SACHR))	1 March 1999	Chairman £55,000 Members £8,000
The Health and Safety Executive for NI (it replaces the Health and Safety Agency for NI)	1 April 1999	Chairman £15,000 Members £3,930

Administration of Justice (Databases)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list those public bodies concerned in the administration of justice which maintain computerised databases containing personal details and information about non-employees. [80609]

Mr. Ingram: Both the Probation Board for Northern Ireland and the Juvenile Justice Board (formerly Rathgael and Whiteabbey Training Schools Management Board) maintain a computerised database.

Firearms (Private Individuals)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list the (a) numbers and (b) type of firearms officially registered or held by private individuals in Northern Ireland, indicating how many are for personal protection. [80454]

Mr. Ingram: At 31 December 1998 there were 139,588 firearms held by private individuals in Northern Ireland on foot of 84,553 firearms certificates issued by the Chief Constable. The breakdown of the firearms figures is as follows:

Firearm	Number
Shotguns and airguns	112,657 (90,548 and 22,109 respectively)
Rifles	14,254
Handguns	12,690 (including 9,605 personal protection firearms)
Miscellaneous	58 (mainly firearms used for the humane killing of animals)

Macpherson Report

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to the Home Secretary's statement to the House on 24 February 1999, Official Report, columns 389–403, (a) how she plans to respond to Sir William Macpherson's recommendations and (b) whether she will consider amending the Fair Employment and Treatment Order 1998. [80610]

Mr. Ingram: I have been considering the report into the brutal murder of Stephen Lawrence in the particular circumstances of Northern Ireland. The Report focuses on the Metropolitan Police but it raises many issues for policing and, indeed, society generally. Many of the Lawrence Report's recommendations are pertinent in Northern Ireland, not only in terms of how racial differences are addressed, but also in terms of divisions along religious and other lines.

The Government attach great importance to issues of racial equality in Northern Ireland and, in the context of policing, I welcome the first meeting of the Consultative Committee on Policing for Ethnic Minorities hosted recently by the Police Authority for Northern Ireland and the RUC. This Committee will do much to ensure the views of ethnic minority groups are fully understood and their policing needs met. It will develop a greater understanding in the police service of the problems faced by ethnic minorities and provide a means by which these communities can work with the police to provide a better service and have their problems addressed.

The Criminal Justice and Policing section of the Good Friday Agreement recognises that we have a unique opportunity to bring about a society,

"which will recognise the full and equal legitimacy and worth of identifies, senses of allegiance and ethos of all sections of the community in Norther Ireland".

This is why the Government established the independent Commission on Policing and the Review of Criminal Justice which will report later this year. The terms of reference of these two bodies cover many areas highlighted by the report into the murder of Stephen Lawrence.

None the less, there are a number of areas where I will want to see comparable changes to those set out in my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary's action plan for addressing the recommendations of the Lawrence Report. On the application of not only race relations legislation, but all Northern Ireland's stringent equality legislation to the police, I want to see as full a coverage as possible. Northern Ireland is already a leader in providing statutory guarantees of equality of treatment and I want to build on this.

Improving community confidence in policing generally is an essential priority. The Police Authority has set an objective in the recently published Policing Plan requiring the Chief Constable to raise public confidence in the RUC in the year 1999–2000. However, in view of the recommendations contained in the Lawrence Report, I will examine with the Authority and the Chief Constable what more might be needed to promote racial, religious, sex and disability equality and what meaningful measures can be adopted to ensure this happens. There should be no doubt of the Government's commitment to tackling all forms of discrimination.

Turning to the recommendations which affect police complaints and discipline procedure, we are making important changes. On independent investigations we are pressing ahead with the establishment of a Police Ombudsman. This will provide for completely independent investigation of complaints against the police and will provide a model for other systems. We want this system to be as transparent as possible. We will also be introducing important reforms of the police conduct and performance procedures and will consider the further changes recommended by the Lawrence Report in this area.

Whilst first-aid training in the RUC generally meets the standards recommended by the report, we are in touch with the RUC to ensure that any steps necessary to reduce intervals between refresher training are advanced as a matter of urgency. In other aspects of training, the police will build upon the initiatives taken as part of the Community Awareness Programme which already uses outside trainers from a wide variety of organisations. On inspection, similar changes to the role of Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary will be made in Northern Ireland in line with those being made by the Home Secretary.

The Report raises issues about communication between the prosecuting authorities and victims. In Northern Ireland victims or their families are informed about the progress of their case by the RUC at key stages during the process, and by staff of the Department of the Director of Public Prosecutions in Northern Ireland if any decisions are taken once the case has actually come to court. The experience of those victims and witnesses who are made to feel particularly vulnerable because of the nature of the offence they are giving evidence about has been considered by a working group since last May. The group will be making recommendations to me in the Summer as to how the criminal justice system might better assist such witnesses.

The Stephen Lawrence Report highlights the need for co-ordinated action across the public sector if reforms are to be truly effective. For this reason the Government will be seeking to work closely with the new Assembly in Northern Ireland on those recommendations dealing with education and equality law. Consultation with bodies outside central Government will also be required. I have already initiated this action.

The Government consider the protection of human rights, equality of treatment and respect for difference cultures as fundamental aspects of the ethos of the police service in Northern Ireland. A service where, as the Chief Constable has indicated, there is no room for prejudice of any kind and cultural diversity is celebrated. The recommendations of the Report on Stephen Lawrence will help us in pursuing this aim.

Irish-Medium Schools

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list the Irish-medium (a) primary and (b) secondary schools and state the number of pupils enrolled in each at the start of the current school year. [80611]

Mr. McFall: The information requested is as follows:

Primary	Pupils
Bunscoil Phobal Feirste	332
Bunscoil Na Fuiseoige	77
Bunscoil Na Bhfal	187
Bunscoil Cholmicille	218

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many school pupils were being taught in the Irish language medium in each year since 1985. [80612]

Mr. McFall: Information on the number of pupils taught in Irish Medium schools is as follows:

Year	Pupils
1986–87	253
1987–88	304

1995–96	1,038
1996–97	1,167
1997–98	1,375
1998–99	1,522

Figures on pupils in Irish medium units in English medium schools are not available.

Arrest Warrants

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to her answer of 9 February 1999, Official Report, column 125, on arrest warrants, if she will list the definition and procedural arrangements for review for each of the five categories of arrest warrant and indicate what bodies might constitute the issuing authority in each case; how many extradition warrants were issued to which countries in each of the last 20 years; and how many warrants led to successful extradition. [80613]

Mr. Ingram: Bench/Arrest warrants and Extradition warrants are issued by an RM or a JP and remain current until executed or withdrawn. There is no statutory requirement to periodically refer back to the issuing authority. The term "Extradition Warrant" includes, inter alia, an arrest warrant issued:

(a) by JPs under Article 20 of the Magistrates Courts (NI) Order 1981; or

(b) by Crown Court judges; or

(c) by JPs under Section 72 of the Criminal Justice Act 1967 which seek the arrears of convicted persons who have escaped from or are otherwise unlawfully at large from prison.

Committal warrants and Distress warrants are issued by an RM or JP or Clerk of Petty Sessions and are required to be returned to the issuing authority for cancellation or re-issue if they have not been executed within a reasonable time determined by reference to the circumstances of each case. Enforcement of Judgement warrants are issued by the Chief Enforcement Officer and are cancelled or re-issued if not executed within 12 months.

The following table reflects the number of extradition requests made to foreign jurisdictions since 1979 (per person sought). The figures do not show the number of warrants issued in respect of each person as on many occasions a large number of warrants could be issued for the one individual.

Country	Persons sought	Successful extraditions
USA	8	[1]1
Holland	2	2

Republic of Ireland	238	106

Formal records were not kept in this format prior to 1990. Figures before 1990 have been compiled from other sources and may therefore be subject to amendment.

HMP Maghaberry

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will request HM Inspector of Prisons to investigate assaults and arson attacks on prison officers at HMP Maghaberry. [80602]

Mr. Ingram: No.

I am satisfied that any assaults or arson attacks which have occurred at HMP Maghaberry, have been fully investigated by the Governor and his staff and appropriate remedial action taken. I shall not, therefore, be requesting HM Inspector of Prisons to investigate.

Fair Employment

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland in what form and where (a) complaints made under fair employment legislation, (b) friendly settlements and (c) decisions of the Fair Employment Tribunal are listed. [80604]

Mr. Ingram: Complaints to the Fair Employment Tribunal made under the Fair Employment legislation are entered in a public register.

Decisions of a Fair Employment Tribunal are held in a separate public register. Both registers are available for inspection at the Office of the Industrial Tribunals and the Fair Employment Tribunal.

There is no obligation on those who settle to provide or publish information on that settlement. However, settlements between the parties in cases conciliated by the Labour Relations Agency are also recorded in the decision register and the Fair Employment Commission also includes in its Annual Reports details of settlements in which it was involved.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assistance is available for employers to maintain a computerised record of monitoring under Fair Employment legislation and what assessment she has made of the practicality of developing a dedicated software package for these purposes. [80605]

Mr. Ingram: No assistance is currently available for employers to maintain a computerised record of monitoring under Fair Employment legislation. An assessment has not been made of the practicality of developing a dedicated software package for these purposes. However, a number of private sector concerns have developed dedicated software packages to assist employers maintain monitoring records.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on how many occasions in each year since 1990 the Fair Employment Commission has acted on section 33(3) of the Fair Employment Act (Northern Ireland) Act 1989 in (a) serving a notice containing directions under section 34 and (b) making an application to the tribunal under section 16. [80606]

Mr. Ingram: Since 1990 the Fair Employment Commission has not issued any notices under Section 33(3) of the Fair Employment (Northern Ireland) Act 1989 and consequently no action has been required under Section 34 to serve a notice containing directions not to make an application to the Tribunal under Section 16.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on how many occasions in each year since 1990 (a) the Fair Employment Commission has served a notice under section 36(2) of the Fair Employment Act (Northern Ireland) Act 1989 concerning goals and timetables and (b) a person has been (i) prosecuted and (ii) found guilty of an offence under section 36(7). [80607]

Mr. Ingram: The Fair Employment Commission has not issued any notices concerning goals and timetables under Section 36(2) of the Fair Employment (Northern Ireland) Act 1989 and hence there have been no prosecutions.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on how many occasions in each year since 1990 (a) the Fair Employment Commission has issued a notice under section 38 of the Fair Employment Act (Northern Ireland) Act 1989 stating an employer is not qualified under the Act and (b) an employer has won an appeal against such a decision. [80608]

Mr. Ingram: Since 1990 just one employer has been served with a not qualified notice under Section 38 of the Fair Employment (Northern Ireland) Act 1989. This was in 1991. Subsequently the required monitoring return was made and the notice was revoked. No employer has appealed.

SCOTLAND

Macpherson Inquiry

Mr. Efford: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the implications for his Department of the Macpherson Inquiry recommendations; and if he will make a statement. [80528]

Mr. McLeish: The Scottish Office is currently considering the implications for Scotland of the recommendations of the Macpherson Inquiry. Our intention is to publish an action plan as soon as possible. From 1 July 1999 this will be a mater for the Scottish Parliament.

I also refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office on 14 April 1999, Official Report, column 14b.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Employment Tribunal Service

Mr. Burgon: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what targets he has set the Employment Tribunal Service for 1999–2000. [81477]

Mr. Byers: I have set the following targets for the ETS for 1999–2000.

To bring to a first hearing at least 85 per cent. of single employment tribunal cases within 26 weeks of receipt;

In relation to the above target, all employment tribunal offices to achieve at least 75 per cent.;

To issue at least 85 per cent. of decisions within 4 weeks of the final hearing;

To reduce administrative unit costs in the employment tribunals by 5 per cent. in real terms;

At least 80 per cent. of employment tribunal users to express satisfaction, in surveys, with the service offered by the ETS;

At least 90 per cent. of appeals registered by the Employment Appeal Tribunal for preliminary hearing to be ready for listing within 6 weeks.

EU Structural Funds

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 31 March 1999, Official Report, column 803, on structural funds, when he expects to be able to indicate what the EU structural fund allocation to the United Kingdom will be in each of the years 2000 to 2004. [80593]

Mr. Wills [holding answer 13 April 1999]: Following the agreement at the Berlin European Council, the Commission have yet to indicate when they will be able to inform Member States of what their individual EU Structural Fund allocation will be for the years 2000 to 2006. Until that time, the Government are not in a position to say how much the UK will receive.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what will be the allocation for (a) structural funds and (b) cohesion funds in the EU in 2000 expressed in 1999 prices; and what percentage of EU-15 GDP in 2000 this will represent. [80590]

Mr. Wills [holding answer 13 April 1999]: At Berlin, it was concluded that the total amount available for commitments under the Structural Funds for the year 2000 will be 29,430 million euros (1999 prices), and for the Cohesion Fund it will be 2,615 million euros (1999 prices). This equates to about 0.4 per cent. of EU-15 GDP in the year 2000.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 31 March 1999, Official Report, column 803, on EU structural funds if he will express the sum of 11,990 million euro in sterling, indicating the rates of exchange used. [80591]

Mr. Byers: 11,990 million euro equates to £8,790 million using an £/euro exchange rate of £1 = 1.364 euro (the average rate from 1995 to date).

Assisted Areas Map

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to publish the reviewed assisted areas map; and if he will make a statement. [80265]

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish the assisted areas map at the same time as it is submitted to the European Commission; and if he will make a statement. [80592]

Mr. Wills: Ministers are currently considering what proposals they will put forward. They will be published as soon as possible.

Inward Investment

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the work he has done to secure (a) Korean and (b) Japanese inward investment into the United Kingdom. [81098]

Mr. Wills: The Invest in Britain Bureau (IBB), which is jointly managed by DTI and FCO, works to secure the UK's position as the number one European location for Japanese and Korean investment. IBB runs a programme of company visits (900 in Japan, 220 in Korea in 1998–99), promotional seminars, media campaigns and inward missions aimed at attracting inward investment, as well as working closely with existing investors alongside the UK Development Agencies.

The Ministerial teams in both Departments support this, both here in the UK and when travelling overseas. For example, I recently met senior representatives of Honda Motors and intend to meet other Japanese and Korean companies located here.

Lobbyists

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish a list, including names and dates, of all meetings that (a) he, (b) his officials, (c) his advisers and (d) his PPS have held during (i) 1997, (ii) 1998 and (iii) 1999 with people who work for political lobbying firms or for businesses that are members of the Public Relations Consultants Association. [79640]

Mr. Byers: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to the hon. Member for Lewes (Mr. Baker) on 9 March 1999, Official Report, column 168.

Parliamentary Private Secretaries are bound by the requirements of the Ministerial Code when attending any meetings in an official or semi-official capacity.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Genetically Modified Crops

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment his Department has made of the likely implications of the cultivation of genetically modified crops for the volume of pesticides used; and what studies he has commissioned on this matter. [74868]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 5 March 1999]: A scientific review of the impact of genetically modified crops on herbicide use was published by the Pesticides Safety Directorate of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on 15 December 1998.

Pesticide use has been monitored by MAFF's Pesticides Usage Survey Group for over thirty years. Discussions will be taking place in the near future to decide how this group's monitoring activities can be enhanced to monitor and provide information on the use of pesticides on genetically modified crops.

The farm-scale evaluations into the ecological effects of genetically modified crops being set up by my Department, MAFF and Scottish Office will also provide information on herbicide use on genetically modified crops compared to conventional equivalent crops and the comparative impact of the different herbicide regimes on farmland wildlife.

CO_2 Emissions

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what is the estimated annual reduction in CO_2 emissions in (a) 2000, (b) 2005 and (c) 2010 from continuing the duty escalator on road fuels; [77839]

(2) what is the estimated annual reduction in CO_2 emissions in (a) 2000, (b) 2005 and (c) 2010 from the increase in hydrocarbon duties on road fuels implemented in the 1999 Budget. [77838]

Dr. Reid: The fuel duty escalator is a long-term strategy introduced by the last Government whose impact on transport emissions can be expected to build up over time.

The escalator is also part of a package of measures to reduce emissions, particularly of CO_2, through the promotion of fuel efficiency and reduced congestion. Taken on its own, increasing fuel duty by six per cent. per annum in real terms between 1996 and 2002 is currently estimated to reduce 2010 road traffic CO_2 emissions by between 2 and 5 million tonnes of carbon, as set out in the Climate Change Consultation Paper.

Estimates of the incremental contribution of a single year's duty increases towards the savings estimated for the strategy as a whole are even more difficult. On average, however, we calculate that each year of the escalator contributes between 0.3 and 0.75 million tonnes towards the savings estimated in 2010 for the strategy as a whole.

Multi-modal Study

Jane Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what the terms of reference and areas of study are for the London to Reading multi-modal study. [80022]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The London to Reading multi-modal study is included in the second tranche of the multi-modal studies programme announced last month; work on which will start in 2000–01. The Government Office for the South East will set up a steering group to include representatives from the South East Regional Planning conference (SERPLAN), and other regional and transport interests, to determine the terms of reference for the study and to take the study forward.

The London to Reading study will also take into account any emerging findings from the London to South West and the South Wales multi-modal study, which is included in tranche one of the studies programme and will start in 1999–2000.

PFI Credits

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) if he will make a statement on the allocation of PFI credits for the proposed Baldock bypass; [79788]

(2) in what circumstances a local authority may bid for the allocation of PFI credits in respect of more than one major transport project; [79787]

(3) if Hertfordshire County Council is limited to submitting only one major project bid for PFI credits; and if he will make a statement; [79791]

(4) to what extent the (a) population, (b) level of car ownership and (c) scale of transport problems in a highway authority area are taken into account in setting the number of major schemes per authority which will be approved for the allocation of PFI credits; and if he will make a statement. [79786]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 13 April 1999]: The level of resources likely to be available for major transport projects during the 5-year period covered by Local Transport Plans is such that it is likely that there will be a significant number of plans for which no scheme is approved. Against this background there would need to be exceptional circumstances to justify approving more than one scheme in any one plan. No authority is precluded from submitting more than one scheme but they should consult their Government Office before doing so. All bids will be considered on their merits in line with the policies referred to in the guidance issued to local authorities.

Any bid that Hertfordshire may make for a Baldock Bypass will be considered on this basis.

Gaul

Mr. Alan Johnson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the Marine Accident Investigation Branch report of their survey of the 'Gaul' will be published; and what are his intentions regarding the reopening of the formal investigation into the loss of the vessel. [81161]

Mr. Prescott: The Marine Accidents Investigation Branch report is published today. The Chief Inspector recommends that there is new and important evidence meriting the reopening of the Formal Investigation into the loss of the vessel. I have today ordered the reopening of the Formal Investigation in full before a Wreck Commissioner.

I have also decided that my Department will support an application to the Wreck Commissioner that the reasonable costs of a single legal team to represent the interests of the relatives of those lost with the vessel at the reopened investigation should be met from public funds.

Mr. Roger Clarke, a senior official from my Department, will investigate why no searches were made for the Gaul after she sank. His results will be published. Mr. Clarke, assisted by a forensic scientist and forensic pathologist, will undertake the location and examination of three unidentified bodies found in Northern Russia following the loss of the vessel.

DEFENCE

Drugs Operations

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many times in each of the last five years his Department's personnel have been involved in counter-drugs operations; which units were involved; and what was the cost above normal expenditure for the operations. [80712]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary gave to him on 1 March 1999, Official Report, columns 504–05. The operational details of counter-drugs support to HM Customs and Excise are sensitive and I am withholding the identities of the units involved in accordance with exemptions 1 and 4 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information. The additional costs incurred by MOD in these operations are typically in the region of £70–140k, depending upon the duration of the task and the extent of military involvement. These costs are recovered from HM Customs and Excise. There are no additional costs incurred by the West Indies Guard Ship in carrying out counter-drugs tasks in the Caribbean.

Personnel Records

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the headings or fields of information under which his Department's databases record personal details of serving and former members of HM armed forces. [80614]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Personal details of serving and former members of the armed forces are held on a variety of databases which contain a large number of different headings or fields of information. In accordance with the Data Protection Act 1984, details of the Ministry of Defence's use of personal data are contained within the Data Protection Register. The Register entry shows the purposes for which data are held by the Department and for each purpose:

(a) the types of individuals about whom data are held;

(b) the classes of personal data held;

(c) where the data are obtained from;

(d) who the data may be disclosed to;

(e) any countries outside the UK where the personal data may be sent.

Our Register entry covers both civilian and Service personnel. A list of headings or fields of information particular to databases used for recording personal details of serving and former members of the armed forces is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

The Data Protection Register is publicly available from the Data Registrar's website on http://www.dpr.gov.uk. The Ministry of Defence's Register Entry is G0626166.

Air Defence Exercise (Central Europe)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what was the cost of the air defence exercise in central Europe carried out between 1 April 1997 and 31 March 1998; [72788]

(2) how many personnel were deployed on the air defence exercise in central Europe carried out between 1 April 1997 and 31 March 1998; and which countries had armed forces involved in the exercise. [72798]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Exercise Central Enterprise was the major annual NATO exercise held in central Europe in the period specified. The countries that participated in the flying activity were Belgium, Turkey, France, Germany, Netherlands, Spain, Italy, Denmark, the USA and the UK. The total number of personnel involved in Central Enterprise is not available, nor are the national costs to other participating nations. Twenty RAF personnel were detached to participate in the exercise, with an additional cost to the RAF in the order of £20K. I understand from NATO that the cost to NATO Exercise Funds was some £41K.

Service Personnel (Sick Leave)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many service personnel were on sick leave when their service with the armed forces ended in each of the last three years. [80696]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Details of the number of Service personnel deemed to be on sick leave at any one time are not held centrally and could only be provided at disproportionate cost. Technically, however, Service personnel are not deemed to be on sick leave at the time of discharge, as they qualify for "terminal leave", or "invalidity leave" if being discharged for medical reasons.

Sick Pay

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will estimate the amount of statutory sick pay which his Department would have been able to claim from the Department of Social Security in each of the last three years if service personnel were eligible for statutory sick pay. [80697]

Mr. Doug Henderson: My Department does not maintain records of the numbers of Service personnel deemed to be on sick leave at any one time and could only provide that information at disproportionate cost. However, under the Statutory Sick Pay Act 1994, payment of Statutory Sick Pay (SSP) became the responsibility of employers and the ability for them to reclaim up to 80 per cent. of costs from the Department of Social Security ceased. Employers were compensated for the extra SSP costs by a reduction in employers' National Insurance Contributions. No estimate has therefore been made of any amount which would notionally have been recoverable.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with the Department of Social Security concerning the eligibility of service personnel for statutory sick pay. [80699]

Mr. Doug Henderson: None. Service personnel are not covered by Statutory Sick Pay (SSP) regulations on the basis that they remain on full pay during periods of sickness, which would exceed any amount payable under the SSP scheme.

Nuclear Accident Response

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much his Department has spent in each of the last five years on nuclear accident response; and if he will list the incidents and the cost involved with each. [80709]

Mr. Doug Henderson: There have been no incidents requiring nuclear accident response over the last five years and therefore no costs have been incurred. However, defence nuclear accident response capabilities are maintained in appropriate divisions within the Department and are regularly exercised. Costs associated are borne by those divisions and no central record is maintained. Such a record could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Search and Rescue

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost in each of the last five years of his Department's search and rescue capability in the UK. [80713]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The figures requested for the search and rescue capability are as follows:

1995–96	33.493
1996–97	34.058
1997–98	35.079
1998–99	36.066

Figures are not readily available for financial year 1994–95, although they are not expected to differ substantially from 1995–96 (appropriately reduced to take account of inflation).

Depleted Uranium

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the link between exposure to depleted uranium and the development of cancer in Gulf War veterans; and if he will make a statement. [81048]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I refer my hon. Friend to paragraphs 7–19 and 31 of the detailed paper "Testing for the presence of depleted uranium in UK veterans of the Gulf conflict: The Current Position", which I published on 19 March. A copy of the paper was sent to my hon. Friend on the date of its publication and copies were also placed in the Library of the House.

In addition, the Ministry of Defence is funding a major epidemiological study, led by Professor Nicola Cherry at Manchester University, which aims to determine whether Gulf veterans are experiencing greater ill-health than service personnel who did not take part in the conflict and to identify possible exposures and predisposing factors associated with any distinctive pattern of symptoms which may be found. This study will also investigate whether there is an increased incidence of cancer or mortality amongst Gulf veterans. Initial results are expected to be submitted for publication at around the middle of this year.

Royal Armoured Corps Pool of Officers

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what criteria were used in deciding to disband the Royal Armoured Corps Pool of Officers; [80687]

(2) what steps he has taken to replace the specialist armoured skills and experience at junior commander level which had been provided by the Royal Armoured Corps Pool of Officers. [80689]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Within the reforms of the Territorial Army, the operational requirement for the Royal Armoured Corps (RAC) is to produce trained individual reservists to provide crewmen for Challenger 2 tanks and medium reconnaissance vehicles, and Nuclear, Biological and Chemical (NBC) specialists. Against this background, there is no longer an operational requirement for an RAC pool of ex-regular officers since there will be sufficient expertise available within the new unit structure, and the Regular Army Retired Officers (RARO) will provide a continued source of specialist armoured skills and experience.

Mr. Nicholas Davies

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will (a) set out his reasons for issuing an injunction on 23 February 1998 concerning plans for publication of a book to have been entitled "Ten Thirty Three", by Mr. Nicholas Davies, and (b) ensure that no investigation or inquiry into the death of solicitor Patrick Finucane is prevented from having access to unpublished material that is in Mr. Davies's possession. [80601]

Mr. Doug Henderson: An injunction was sought (and subsequently granted) because the manuscript contained material which, had it entered the public domain, would have been damaging to national security and could have posed serious risks to the safety of individuals referred to in the book.

The murder of Patrick Finucane was investigated both by the RUC and subsequently by the investigation team led by John Stevens, then Deputy Chief Constable of Cambridgeshire. In the event of any future investigation into this case my Department would co-operate fully as we did with the earlier investigations including, where appropriate, over information held by third parties. In doing so the Ministry of Defence would continue to take into account our continuing duty to safeguard national security and the safety of individuals.

HEALTH

Restraint Techniques

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 22 March 1999, Official Report, column 3, on restraint techniques, if he will publish the figures on deaths in mental health institutions held by the Mental Health Act Commission; and if he will provide a breakdown by ethnicity. [80664]

Mr. Hutton: The data for the year ending 31 January 1999 on deaths of patients detained under the Mental Health Act 1983 have not yet been validated. The Mental Health Act Commission is currently in discussion with a number of academic bodies about the validation process. The Commission will then be in a position to publish the data and to provide a breakdown by ethnicity.

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 22 March 1999, Official Report, column 3, on restraint techniques, what guidance his Department has issued to trusts on what constitutes appropriate staffing levels and policies. [80663]

Mr. Hutton: We have issued no guidance specifically in relation to restraint techniques.

Chapter 19 of the Mental Health Act 1983 Code of Practice makes clear that hospitals should have written operational policies on all forms of restraint. It is for trusts to monitor the implementation and effectiveness of these policies and to determine appropriate staffing in accordance with the needs of patients.

European Scrutiny Committee

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list the occasions since 1 May 1997 when his Department has made available to the European Scrutiny Committee unofficial texts of draft European legislation; [80553]

(2) on how many occasions since 1 May 1997 his Department has made available to the European Scrutiny Committee Council working documents. [80546]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 13 April 1999]: The Department receives a large volume of both official and unofficial/working texts during the course of negotiations on European Union legislation. In order to facilitate the work of the European Scrutiny Committee and to keep it informed of the progress of negotiations, the Department regularly submits Explanatory Memoranda to the Committee. Since 1 May 1997, the Department has made no Council working documents available to the Committee and has made unofficial texts available on eight occasions:

17 June 1997:

Proposal for a Council Directive on health protection of individuals against the dangers of ionising radiation in relation to medical exposures, replacing Directive 84–466/Euratom.

28 November 1997:

Council Resolution concerning the report on the state of women's health in the European Community.

4 December 1997:

Proposal for a Directive of the European Parliament and of the Council on in vitro diagnostic medical devices.

2 April 1998:

Proposal for a European Parliament and Council Decision adopting a programme of Community action from 1999–2003 on rare diseases in the context of the framework for action in the field of public health.

2 April 1998:

Proposal for a European Parliament and Council Decision adopting a programme of Community action from 1999–2003 on pollution-related diseases in the context of the framework for action in the field of public health.

20 April 1998:

Proposal for a Council Recommendation on the suitability of blood and plasma donors and the screening of donated blood in the European Community.

2 October 1998:

Proposal for a Directive of the European Parliament and of the Council on in vitro diagnostic medical devices.

9 November 1999:

Proposal for a Council Regulation amending Council Regulation (EC) 297/95 on fees payable to the European Agency for the Evaluation of Medicinal Products.

Guy's and St. Thomas's NHS Trust

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what date the new chair of the Guy's and St. Thomas's NHS Trust was (i) appointed and (ii) told of her appointment; on what date the Trust was told of her appointment; on what date information was given by the NHS of the name of the person appointed; how many and which hon. Members discussed the appointment with Ministers during March, indicating the dates of the discussions; and for what reason the hon. Member for Southwark, North and Bermondsey was not invited to discuss the appointment with Ministers. [80566]

Mr. Denham: Mrs. Patricia Moberly has been appointed as chair of the Guy's and St. Thomas's Hospital National Health Service Trust for the period from 1 April 1999 until 31 October 2002. Ministers reached their decision on 18 March and Mrs. Moberly was told of the appointment by the regional chairman on 19 March. The trust chief executive was told shortly afterwards. The decision was formally announced in a press release issued by the London Regional Office of the NHS Executive on 26 March and in an internal bulletin at the trust on the same day. On 24 February the regional chairman invited all local hon. Members to give their views by 7 March on the candidates for the chairmanship. No written replies were received by the deadline but a number of hon. Members made informal representations directly to Ministers. The hon. Member, for Southwark, North and Bermondsey sent a letter giving his views on 17 March. These were fully considered before the appointment decision was made.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health who has been appointed to chair the Guy's and St. Thomas's NHS Trust from 1 April; how many shortlisted nominees were proposed by the regional office; how many others were Labour party members; and how many had served on NHS trust boards before 1 April as (i) chairmen and (ii) deputy chairmen. [80564]

Mr. Denham: Mrs. Patricia Moberly has been appointed to serve as chair of the Guy's and St. Thomas's Hospitals National Health Service Trust for the period from 1 April 1999 until 31 October 2002. Two other candidates for the chairmanship were put forward by the regional chairman for consideration by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State. All three candidates had served as non-executive board members, Mrs. Moberly on the board of the Guy's and St. Thomas's Hospitals NHS Trust. One other candidate had served as a chair of another NHS Trust, and the remaining one as a vice-chairman of the Guy's and St. Thomas's Hospitals NHS Trust. Candidates for such posts are not required to declare party membership.

Junior Football Staff

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if it is intended that county football associations and junior football clubs shall have access to the register to be established under the Protection of Children Bill when considering the appointment of staff to work with junior footballers. [79910]

Mr. Hutton: The vast majority of such clubs should have access to the list provided that they are "organisations" within the meaning of the Bill, and the post to which the individual is to be appointed meets the definition of "child care position" as set out in the Bill.

Residential Care (Bedfordshire)

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the compliance with the relevant registration standards of (a) nursing homes and (b) residential homes within mid-Bedfordshire. [80481]

Mr. Hutton: None. Residential care homes within the whole of Bedfordshire are registered and inspected by the Registration and Inspection Unit of Bedfordshire County Council. The registration and inspection of nursing homes within Bedfordshire is the responsibility of Bedfordshire Health Authority. Residential care homes and nursing homes are subject to the Registered Homes Act 1984.

Multiple Sclerosis

Audrey Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will recommend to health purchasers that the new provisions for pooled budgets and lead commissioning be implemented in the case of multiple sclerosis patients. [80596]

Mr. Hutton: There is no restriction on the client groups that can benefit from the new provisions. It is for health and local government partners to agree how best to provide services to meet the needs of people in their area. The new provisions give authorities the flexibility to do this and the opportunity to consider innovative new arrangements. Directing authorities, in the first instance, on how to use the flexibilities would run counter to this. However, as the flexibilities start to bed down and lessons are learnt we will wish to spread good practice.

Methadone

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total cost to the NHS in each of the past five years of methadone prescriptions; and from which companies they were purchased. [80600]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 15 April 1999]: The net ingredient cost of prescription items dispensed in the community in England from 1993 to 1997 for methadone hydrochloride is shown in the table.

The majority of items for methadone hydrochloride are prescribed generically. Details of the manufacturers of drugs dispensed against these prescriptions are not known. Items prescribed by their branded names include products manufactured by Glaxo Wellcome, Martindale, Rosemont and Link.

Net ingredient cost (NIC) of prescription items dispensed in the community for methadone hydrochloride, 1993–1997

Year	£000
England
1993	6,803.6
1994	7,993.9
1995	9,086.9
1996	9,912.1
1997	10,668.2

Notes:
1. The figures cover all prescriptions dispensed by community pharmacists, appliance contractors and dispensing doctors and prescriptions submitted by prescribing doctors for items personally administered.
2. The net ingredient cost (NIC) is the basic cost of a drug and does not take account of discounts, dispensing costs, fees or prescription charge income.
3. Methadone hydrochloride is contained in the following British National Formulary sections: BNF 3.9.1—Cough suppressants; BNF 4.7.2—Opioid analgesics; BNF 4.10—Drugs used in substance dependence.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list those people appointed chairman or non-executive director of an NHS trust or health authority since 1 May 1997 who are the spouse or partner of an elected local councillor, stating the party affiliation of the councillor in each case; [80931]

(2) if he will list those people appointed chairman or non-executive director of NHS trusts or health authorities since 1 May 1997 who are the spouse or partner of an hon. Member stating the party affiliation of the hon. Member in each case. [80932]

Mr. Denham: No spouses or partners of hon. Members have been appointed as non-executive directors of National Health Service trusts or health authorities since the Government took office. Information on any such relationships between non-executive directors and elected local councillors is not collected by the Department.

Listening to Women Roadshows

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 12 March 1999, Official Report, columns 415–18, if he will list the women's organisations which have been invited to send representatives to the Listening to Women roadshows at (a) Newcastle, (b) Reading, (c) Leeds and (d) Nottingham. [80898]

Ms Jowell: In addition to organisations, we are publicising the event to individual women not involved in public life. To this end we have invited women who had previously contacted the Women's Unit; published articles in the local press, with an open invitation for local women to attend; publicised the event on local radio; asked local job centres to issue invitations to female jobseekers in the area; and been in liaison with the Commission for Racial Equality for them to suggest interested women.

National Institute for Clinical Excellence

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if disabled people and their organisations will have specific representation on the board of the newly-established National Institute for Clinical Excellence. [80930]

Mr. Hutton: No organisations or groups have specific representation on the board of the National Institute for Clinical Excellence (NICE). The board is a management body, whose purpose is to manage the functions and business of NICE.

NICE has a partners' council, which includes representatives drawn from key stakeholder communities in the NHS, including people with disabilities and their organisations.

PRIME MINISTER

Cystic Fibrosis

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Prime Minister what plans he has to exclude sufferers of cystic fibrosis from charges for medical prescriptions. [80620]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 13 April 1999]: We reviewed exemptions from prescription charges in the Comprehensive Spending Review and concluded that the present arrangements should remain for the rest of this Parliament. We have committed ourselves to no increase in prescription charges above the rate of inflation for the next three years. In every year bar one under the previous Government, prescription charges were increased in real terms—the annual average increase being 12.3 per cent. in real terms.

We continue to demonstrate our commitment to improving the care and quality of life of people with cystic fibrosis through our work with health professionals and all those with relevant interests including the Cystic Fibrosis Trust. This includes provision of Government grant support to the Trust's user involvement project. We have also charged regional offices of the NHS Executive with ensuring that arrangements for commissioning specialised services, such as those for people with cystic fibrosis, are in place. The National Screening Committee is also considering the evidence about antenatal and neonatal screening for cystic fibrosis.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Primary Pupils (Spending)

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the money spent per primary age pupil (a) from local education authorities, (b) from central Government and (c) in total (i) in 1996–97, (ii) in 1997–98 and (iii) estimated for 1998–99 for each local education authority ranked in order of total spend. [80102]

Ms Estelle Morris: The information for the years 1996–97 to 1997–98, the latest year for which the figures are available is contained in a number of tables, copies of which have been placed in the Library. Estimated expenditure figures for each authority in 1998–99 are not available, although nationally local authorities' average budgeted expenditure per pupil rose by £167.

European Scrutiny Committee

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) on how many occasions since 1 May 1997 his Department has made available to the European Scrutiny Committee council working documents; [80545]

(2) if he will list the occasions since 1 May 1997 when his Department has made available to the European Scrutiny Committee unofficial texts of draft European legislation. [80552]

Mr. Andrew Smith [holding answer 13 April 1999]: The Department receives a large volume of both official and unofficial/working texts during the course of negotiations on EU legislation. In order to facilitate the work of the European Scrutiny Committee and to keep it informed of the progress of negotiations, the Department regularly submits Explanatory Memoranda to the Committee. Ninety-two such memoranda have been submitted since 1 May 1997. The Department has provided the Committee with one unofficial text of draft European legislation, in August 1998, and no Council working document since 1 May 1997.

Treaty of Amsterdam

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list each of the new responsibilities which he will assume when the signed Treaty of Amsterdam takes effect and for each (a) the likely effect on departmental staffing, (b) the bodies or persons in the European Union principally concerned and (c) the relevant section of that treaty and the consolidated treaties of the European Union and European Community. [80418]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The Treaty of Amsterdam will introduce a chapter on employment which imposes new responsibilities on member states. The employment chapter formalises and builds on the strategy developed by successive European Councils since 1994; its effect on departmental staffing is likely to be unquantifiable. The other bodies principally concerned are the Council and the Commission. The relevant section of the consolidated treaties is Title VIII (ex Title VIa), Articles 125–130.

Single Teacher Classes

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many pupils in (a) maintained secondary schools and (b) maintained primary schools in (i) England and (ii) Wales were in single teacher classes of 40 or more pupils (A) in January 1999 and (B) in each of the six previous years. [80686]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 15 April 1999]: The available information is shown in the following table.

Information on class sizes in Wales is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Numbers of pupils in classes of 41 or more taught by one teacher in maintained primary and secondary schools in England: 1993–99[1]

[1] Provisional

Chief Inspector of Schools

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Schools. [81554]

Mr. Blunkett: Further to the reply of my hon. Friend the Minister for School Standards to my hon. Friend the Member for Halifax (Mrs. Mahon) on 24 March 1999, Official Report, column 288, I have received papers over the period 6 April to 13 April from solicitors acting on behalf of Mrs. Cathy Woodhead. They relate wholly to the progress of the Woodheads' divorce in 1976 and 1977 and date from September 1976. They contain a number of exchanges between Mrs. Woodhead and her solicitor, plus a signed statement from Chris Woodhead admitting to adultery in November and December 1976, some months after he and Amanda Johnston left Gordano school. I have considered that material. No evidence has been presented to me that proves that Mr. Woodhead had a sexual relationship with Ms Johnston while she was his pupil. Both Mr. Woodhead and Ms Johnston have signed documents to the effect that there was no relationship until the late autumn of 1976.

It is not for me as Secretary of State to intervene in the rights and wrongs of a divorce which took place 23 years age; nor to side with either Mr. or Mrs. Woodhead in a dispute about the facts surrounding that divorce. My responsibility is in relation to the role of the Chief Inspector as a Crown employee and to apply good management practice fairly and impartially. There is nothing in the papers I have seen which substantiates the allegations made against Chris Woodhead or calls into question his suitability to continue as Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Schools. I do not, therefore, intend to carry out any further investigations of this matter.

Public Appointments

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the public appointments for which his Department is responsible and which carry a fee or salary, indicating for each type of appointment the fee or salary band which applies. [80749]

Mr. Mudie [holding answer 15 April 1999]: "Public Bodies 1998"—copies of which are already available in the Library of the House—provides information on the levels of remuneration paid to those serving on the boards of public bodies for which my Department is responsible. The majority of public appointments, however, are unpaid as most of those who accept a public appointment do so on a voluntary basis.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Death Penalty (US)

Jane Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the US Government concerning the abolition of the death penalty; and if he will make a statement. [80024]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Foreign Office Ministers and officials discuss frequently the abolition of the death penalty with their US counterparts. Baroness Symons most recently raised HMG's opposition to the use of the death penalty in the United States with Harold Koh, Assistant Secretary for Democracy, Human Rights and Labour, US State Department, during her visit to Washington in late March.

Her Majesty's Government are opposed to the use of the death penalty in the United States and will continue to use their very close relationship with the US Government to take up death penalty cases whenever appropriate. As EU Presidency in 1998, the UK was instrumental in establishing a set of EU guidelines on death penalty cases, which now form the basis of all EU demarches to the US authorities. To date, the UK has been involved in eight EU demarches. The Foreign Secretary's Death Penalty Panel has also targeted the United States for action, and we are constantly reviewing the best way to tackle the US authorities over the death penalty.

Public Appointments

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the public appointments for which his Department is responsible and which carry a fee or salary, indicating for each type of appointment the fee or salary band which applies. [80746]

Mr. Tony Lloyd [holding answer 15 April 1999]: "Public Bodies 1998", copies of which are available in the Library of the House, provides information on the levels of remuneration paid to those serving on the boards of public bodies for which my Department is responsible. The majority of public appointments, however, are unpaid as most of those who accept a public appointment do so on a voluntary basis.

Of the public bodies for which my Department is responsible, the following pay a remuneration to appointees: British Council (£35,000); Commonwealth Institute (£15,000).

Chechnya

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will report progress on the department's monitoring of the use to which its advice is put by Granger Telecom in respect of their staff working in Chechnya. [81148]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I refer to my replies of 21 January 1999, Official Report, columns 536–37, and 14 April 1999, Official Report, column 257. Granger Telecom have informed FCO officials that following Granger's meeting with FCO officials on 21 August 1998, Granger management did not re-consult their field staff about their willingness to work in Chechnya. The advice given by the FCO at the meeting was discussed by Granger Telecom directors. Granger Telecom have reaffirmed that they drew to the attention of their field staff the FCO travel advice for Russia which stated:

"We strongly advise against travel to the Chechen Republic ... because of the unstable security situation. Visitors have been kidnapped in these areas recently."

Granger Telecom have confirmed that they now have no staff working in Chechnya, and that they have no intention of sending staff to Chechnya.

SOCIAL SECURITY

"Modernising Government"

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to the Government's White Paper, Cm. 4310, "Modernising Government", what are his Department's targets for answering letters, seeing callers without appointments and answering telephone calls; and if he will make a statement. [80895]

Mr. Timms: The current commitments of the Department's Agencies providing a service to the public are:

Answering letters from the public.

Benefits Agency (BA)—to reply within 10 working days of receiving the letter.

Child Support Agency (CSA)—60 per cent. of letters to be answered within 10 working days of receipt.

War Pensions Agency (WPA)—to send an acknowledgement within 5 working days of receipt of the letter. If necessary to make a full response in writing or by phone within 10 working days.

Headquarters—to reply to correspondence from the general public within 20 working days.

Seeing callers without appointments.

BA—receptionist to see callers without appointments within 10 minutes, although this might not be possible in busy periods, the caller should not have to wait more than 30 minutes.

CSA—if the caller has not phoned to arrange an appointment, the Agency aims for a member of CSA staff to see the caller within 10 minutes of the receptionist telling the CSA that the caller has arrived.

WPA—visitors to WPA will be seen within 10 minutes.

Answering telephone calls.

BA—all offices set and publish their own standard for how quickly they answer the phone.

CSA—National Enquiry Line (NEL)—to respond to 80 per cent. of telephone calls within 20 seconds. 80 per cent. of telephone calls to client helplines to be answered first time.

WPA—calls to the Helpline to be answered within 30 seconds. If the question cannot be answered straight away the Agency will call back, at a time convenient to the caller.

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to the Government's White Paper, Cm. 4310, "Modernising Government", what complaints procedure is to be implemented by his Department; how it will be publicised; and if he will make a statement. [80896]

Mr. Timms: Each of the Department's Agencies already has a complaints procedure. Details are set out in their Service First Charters. They are also publicised through a variety of media, such as leaflets, posters, and on the Internet.

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to the Government's White Paper, Cm. 4310, "Modernising Government", what changes he proposes to make to his Department's services for people with special needs; what methods of consultation he will undertake to assess the effectiveness of the changes; and if he will make a statement. [80897]

Mr. Timms: The "Modernising Government" White Paper makes clear our commitment to provide public services that address the needs of all groups in society. We are committed to improving opportunities and incentives for people who want to work, whilst providing appropriate support to those who cannot.

Those with special needs will have access to the New Deal for Disabled People (NDDP), a joint initiative with the Department for Education and Employment to improve opportunities for disabled people who want to move into, or stay in work. In developing the NDDP we have been consulting closely with disabled people and the organisations that represent them. Consultation has taken place at key stages throughout the development of the programme and will continue in the future. As part of the NDDP we are piloting a Personal Adviser service for disabled people in 12 areas covering over 250,000 people receiving an Incapacity Benefit. The service is providing personal support to disabled people who wish to move into, or remain in work. We are also funding 24 Innovative Schemes to test the best ways of helping disabled people into work, of which four specifically cater for people with learning difficulties.

We have arranged for independent evaluation of the initiatives under the NDDP that will include the views of the disabled people who have used them.

In addition to the NDDP, we will be piloting the Single Work Focused Gateway in 12 areas, starting from June 1999. All claimants in the Gateway pilot areas will be allocated their own personal adviser who will help provide appropriate guidance and support for those who want to consider employment, training and rehabilitation.

Through the Welfare Reform and Pensions Bill we plan to modernise disability benefits so that they will provide more help for disabled people in greatest need. Certain young disabled people will be entitled to Incapacity Benefit without having to meet the usual contribution conditions; they will gain by up to £26.40 a week. And the higher rate of mobility component of Disability Living Allowance worth £37 a week will be available to severely disabled children aged three and four.

Non-state Administered Pensions

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people earning between £9,000 and £18,500 are currently paying into some form of non-state administered pension provision; and if he will estimate the proportion which (a) will remain in this earnings bracket for more than five years and (b) will have an income above £18,500 within five years. [81123]

Mr. Timms: Information is not available in the form requested. Such information as is available is as follows.

Analysis of the 1996 General Household Survey (GHS) and Summer 1998 Labour Force Survey (LFS) suggests that there are around 10.75 million people earning between £9,000 and £20,000. Of these, half are members of an occupational pension scheme, and 2.5 million contribute to a personal pension. Of these 2.5 million, 1 million make no additional contributions above the contracted-out rebate. As the GHS and LFS do not track individuals over a number of years, it is not possible to use these surveys to reliably forecast changes in earnings from year to year.

Estimates made by the Institute for Fiscal Studies (IFS)[1] using data from the British Household Panel Survey suggest that of those employees earning between £9,000 and £18,500 at least once between 1992 and 1995, 38 per cent. had earnings within this range in all 4 years, and 26 per cent. earned above £18,500 at least once during this period.

Ethnic Groups

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the ethnic groups present in the United Kingdom and indicate the number of adult (i) males, (ii) females and (iii) children in each such group. [81156]

Ms Hewitt: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. William Ross, dated 16 April 1999:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS) I have been asked to reply to your recent question on the ethnic groups present in the United Kingdom.

The latest information available, from the first three quarters of the 1998 Labour Force Survey, is shown for Great Britain in the table.

Correspondence

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects to reply to the question from the hon. Member for Bognor Regis and Littlehampton of 11 March (Ref. 76246). [80894]

Dawn Primarolo: I have done so.

Income Tax (10 Per Cent. Band)

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what effect the introduction of a 10 per cent. income tax band will have on covenanted payments to charities made under existing arrangements by people who, after 5 April, pay a marginal income tax rate of 10 per cent. [80141]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 13 April 1999]: The introduction of the 10 per cent. rate will have no effect on covenanted payments to charities.

Indonesia

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps his Department is taking to encourage the attachment of environmental and social conditions to the provision by official bodies of (a) international loans and (b) other financial assistance to Indonesia. [77643]

Ms Hewitt: The UK supports the importance attached by the IMF and World Bank to social and environmental issues in the context of its assistance to Indonesia.

A number of the reforms on which Indonesia's IMF programme is conditional relate to policies aimed at mitigating the effect of the financial crisis on the poorest in society. All World Bank projects take account of environmental guidelines, a copy of which has been placed in the House of Commons Library.

Overseas assistance is the responsibility of DFID, which is focusing on addressing a number of social and environmental issues in Indonesia.

Taxation

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish the amounts, (i) in current prices, (ii) in constant 1998–99 prices and (iii) as percentages of personal income, taken by (a) income taxes, (b) national insurance contributions, (c) value-added tax, (d) other central Government indirect taxes, (e) the aggregate of (a) to (d), (f) average council tax payments and (g) the aggregate of (a) to (d) and (f) for (1) a single person, (2) a married couple without children, both working, (3) a married couple with two children, husband in work, wife not working, in each case at 50, 75, 100, 150 and 200 per cent. of average earnings for the financial year 1999–2000, taking account of changes announced in his Budget Statement on 9 March 1999, Official Report columns 173–190, and previously announced changes, and for each of the years (x) 1996–97, (y) 1997–98 and (z) 1998–99. [76246]

Dawn Primarolo: The available information, which shows income tax (including child benefit and family credit/working families tax credit) and national insurance contributions, at multiples of median full-time earnings of all employees is given in the table. The figures are shown in (a) current prices and (b) as percentages of income, for (i) the years 1996–97 to 1998–99 where the figures take account of all changes announced in and before the 1998 Budget, and (ii) for 1999–2000 where the figures taken account of all changes announced in the 1998 and 1999 Budgets which cover 1999–2000 to 2001–02. Estimating the impact of indirect taxes is imprecise as spending patterns vary widely between households with the same composition and income. The level of council tax payments will also vary depending on where families live.

Changes announced in this and the last Budget will offer significant help to families. From October 1999 the WFTC will mean that no family with children will pay net income tax until their earnings exceed £235 per week or more than £12,000 per year. On average families with children will be £740 per year better off.

Notes:

1. Income tax payments are calculated on the basis that the households receive no tax reliefs other than the standard allowances and only have income from employment. All earners, including wives, are assumed to pay Class 1 national insurance contributions at the contracted-in rate.

2. Earnings are taken to be the median gross weekly earnings of all full-time employees on adult rates with pay unaffected by absence. (Median earnings are more representative of the population as a whole than mean male full-time earnings.)

3. A family with 2 children is assumed to have both children aged under 11.

4. In line with the convention in the Tax Benefit Reference Manual, child benefit is treated as negative income tax.

5. Family Credit, although not part of the tax system, has been treated in the same way as WFTC so as to provide comparability with the tax system following the introduction of WFTC.

6. The calculations assume earnings growth for 1998–99 onwards of an illustrative 4 per cent.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

IACS Maps

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many officials are involved in IACS map checks; how many map checks have been carried out; and what was the financial saving as a result of the mistakes found. [73293]

Mr. Rooker: Under the programme carried out by the Department between 1994–1998, IACS map checks were undertaken in respect of 2,174,843 field areas and numbers to establish the accuracy of the details included in Area Aid Applications and entered on the IACS database. The number of officials involved in the programme and the total value of reductions to claims were not recorded centrally and the information could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, the object of the programme was to protect Community expenditure on the schemes governed by IACS not only for the period up to 1998 but also, by verifying the information recorded on the IACS database, which is used to validate claims in subsequent years.

CAP

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish for each year between 1992 and 1999 what his Department assessed to be the world prices for the agricultural outputs, products and animals, which are the subject of its Common Agricultural Policy. [79777]

Mr. Rooker: Agricultural commodities can have a range of traded values on world markets depending on product quality, specification and seasonality. Our Department uses a number of sources of published information in order to assess this range. Sources include publications by the OECD, the World Bank, the World Trade Organisation (WTO) and specialist agricultural reports such as those provided by Agra Europe. World prices for agricultural outputs, products and animals for 1999 are not yet available.

Copies of the OECD and WTO reports are available in the Library of the House. The World Bank and Agra Europe reports are available direct from those organisations.

Macpherson Inquiry

Mr. Efford: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the implications for his Department of the Macpherson inquiry recommendations; and if he will make a statement. [80525]

Mr. Morley: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office on 14 April 1999, Official Report, column 239–40. MAFF will be participating fully in all central initiatives to address race equality issues in the Civil Service, and will be actively addressing these issues within the Department.

Farmers (Land Management)

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in what ways his Department plans to provide support for farmers in managing land so as to increase biodiversity. [79905]

Mr. Morley: The Government are fully committed to increasing biodiversity. MAFF operates a wide ranging package of voluntary environmental schemes aimed at encouraging farmers to conserve the countryside and its wildlife and thereby contribute to meeting the objectives of the UK Biodiversity Action Plan. Following the Government's Comprehensive Spending Review, we have announced that we aim to expand the area protected and enhanced under the major agri-environment schemes. During the next three years an additional £40 million will be available in England for additional agreements under these schemes.

MAFF also funds free initial on-farm conservation advice which is provided to farmers by ADAS and the Farming and Wildlife Advisory Group (FWAG).

Rendering Plants

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action the Government are taking to facilitate the establishment of porcine-only rendering plants. [80243]

Mr. Rooker: Representations have been made by the pig industry and the Meat and Livestock Commission (MLC) to allow porcine MBM to be fed to poultry on the condition that processing takes place in rendering plants dedicated to pig waste. The existing ban was put in place on the recommendation of the Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee, and the Government continue to base their handling of BSE on the advice of that Committee.

Before we would be prepared to ask SEAC to look at the use of porcine MBM for export or poultry feed purposes the industry itself will need to address the key issues of how monitoring at all stages of production and distribution would be carried out to avoid the possibility of cross-contamination.

Rendering

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what quantity of United Kingdom pig, poultry and beef waste is exported from the United Kingdom for rendering in other countries. [80487]

Mr. Rooker: In 1998 UK exports of poultry and non-bovine mammalian waste was 62,600 tonnes (provisional figure). The Overseas Trade Statistics do not further specify the derivation of this waste or the purpose for which it is exported. Since 27 March 1996 the export of products from bovine animals has been banned.

Genetically Modified Oil Seed Rape

Ms Walley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what the earliest possible date is for commercial planting in the UK of genetically modified oil seed rape. [80554]

Mr. Rooker: There will be no commercial planting of genetically modified oilseed rape in the UK before 2000.

Krebs Report

Mrs. Gordon: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much has been spent on the (a) preparation and (b) implementation of the Krebs report to date. [79866]

Mr. Rooker: (a) The cost of preparing the Krebs report, including the committee expenditure and publication, amounted to approximately £370,000.

(b) The cost of implementation to date is £3.5 million. This includes the culling trial and associated activities. The cost of some recommendations, such as the open competition necessary to ensure that research should be contracted with the people who are best able to carry them out, are met from central expenditure and cannot be separately identified.

Mrs. Gordon: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the cost of fully implementing the Krebs report. [79867]

Mr. Rooker: We have spent more than £3.5 million on implementing the Krebs report to date. It is estimated that £11.4 million will be spent on research and various projects recommended in the Krebs report in 1999/2000. I envisage that expenditure will continue at broadly this level for some years, but cannot provide a total figure, which will depend on the results and the speed at which those results are received and analysed.

Bonemeal

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the (a) medical and (b) public health implications of feeding livestock with bonemeal from UK-produced pig and poultry. [80485]

Mr. Rooker: Mammalian meat and bonemeal (MBM) is considered to have been the main source of infection in the BSE epidemic. Controls on the use of mammalian MBM have been progressively tightened in the light of experience and the latest available advice from the Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee (SEAC), the Government's independent advisor on BSE issues. The controls in place are: a prohibition on all mammalian protein, including MBM, in ruminant feed; and a prohibition on the feeding of mammalian MBM to all farmed livestock to prevent cross-contamination of ruminant rations. This ban was not introduced to protect the health of pigs and poultry. The existing bans on the use of mammalian MBM in feed for farmed animals do not extend to MBM derived from poultry.

SEAC provided advice to the Government on the practice of intraspecies recycling of waste in the pig and poultry industries in December 1997. They considered that there may be a very small risk of transmissible spongiform encephalopathies (TSEs) arising spontaneously within a species and recommended that a strategy be developed to remove the small potential risk of TSE transmission from the recycling of pig and poultry waste as feed for the same species. The Government have accepted this advice.

Copies of all SEAC advice are placed in the Libraries of the House.

Treaty of Amsterdam

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list each of the new responsibilities which he will assume when the signed Treaty of Amsterdam takes effect and for each (a) the likely effect on departmental staffing, (b) the bodies or persons in the European Union principally concerned and (c) the relevant section of that treaty and the consolidated treaties of the European Union and European Community. [80420]

Mr. Rooker: The Treaty of Amsterdam will have minimal impact on the responsibilities of the Department and its staffing. As far as EU bodies are concerned, there will be an increased role for the European Parliament, following the amendment to Article 129 of the Treaty to extend the co-decision procedure to cover measures in the veterinary and phytosanitary fields which have as their direct objective the protection of public health.

Pig Farmers

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what analysis he has made of support from the Government of the USA for pig farmers in that country; and if he will make a statement on the implications of that support for United Kingdom producers. [80246]

Mr. Rooker: Late last year the USA Government introduced a variety of aid measures for small pig farmers. Although the USA is the EU's main competitor in world pigmeat markets, the impact of these aid measures on UK producers is likely to be indirect and relatively small.

Pig Products

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to encourage caterers in the public sector to source British pig products. [80245]

Mr. Rooker: Ministers in MAFF have spearheaded a campaign that seeks to improve communication and understanding between the domestic pigmeat industry and the catering and food service sector, including companies involved in public sector catering. The ultimate objective of this campaign is to increase the usage of pigmeat products in the catering sector by stressing the quality and welfare benefits of British pigmeat, thereby improving market opportunities for UK pig producers.

Food Standards Agency

Mr. Drew: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will introduce measures to ensure that the costs of the Food Standards Agency are not imposed upon farmers. [79879]

Mr. Rooker: Our detailed proposals for a levy scheme to fund the new costs of the Food Standards Agency, recently the subject of extensive public consultation, do not propose that the levy be applied to farms. However, farm shops required to register under the Food Premises (Registration) Regulations 1991 would be required to pay the proposed levy.

Genetically Modified Food

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many representations he has received from (a) hon. Members and (b) others on the issue of genetically modified food; and what proportion of these representations called for a restriction on the development or sale of genetically modified products. [80211]

Mr. Rooker: Since the beginning of 1998, Ministers in this Department have received 1,100 letters from hon. Members about GM foods and biotechnology in general, and approximately 5,500 letters from members of the public and others. Although many of these expressed concerns about the technology of one sort or another, it is not possible to determine the exact proportion which called for a restriction to be placed on the development or sale of GM products without incurring disproportionate costs.

Honey

Ms Walley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received from UK honey suppliers regarding potential contamination of honey by genetically modified material, with particular reference to (a) DNA and (b) proteins; and if he will make a statement. [80555]

Mr. Rooker: I have received occasional representations from beekeepers seeking advice on the implications of bees foraging GM crops. The Advisory Committee on Novel Foods and Processes hosted a workshop in 1991 to consider the safety of pollen from GM plants in honey. The workshop's conclusion was that the consumption of gene products from pollen in honey was likely to be negligible. The results from three research projects commissioned by MAFF to investigate this further subsequently confirmed this conclusion.

Internal Drainage Boards

Mr. Brake: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will (a) list the members of internal drainage boards in England and Wales and (b) publish the register of interests for these members. [81052]

Mr. Morley: This information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

SCOTLAND

New Opportunities Fund

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he intends to reply to the letter from the hon. and learned Member for Orkney and Shetland of 5 February regarding the operation of the New Opportunities Fund in Scotland. [80933]

Mr. Dewar: A reply will be sent very shortly.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Macpherson Inquiry

Mr. Efford: To ask the Attorney-General what assessment he has made of the implications for his Department of the Macpherson Inquiry recommendations; and if he will make a statement. [80526]

The Attorney-General: I refer my hon. Friend to the written answer given to him by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office on 14 April 1999, Official Report, columns 239–40.

Glidewell Report

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Attorney-General what decisions he has taken on the recommendations on file preparation, case management and witness warning in the report of the Review of the Crown Prosecution Service by the right hon. Sir Iain Glidewell. [81491]

The Attorney-General: The interim response to the Report by Sir Iain Glidewell which I published on 30 November 1998 drew attention to the fact that these key recommendations (recommendations 13–16, 20 and 31) were being considered by a newly formed Criminal Justice Units Project Group, chaired jointly by the CPS and the Association of Police Officers. The Project Group, which also included representatives from other agencies and an independent member, has now completed its consideration of the Report's recommendations, and has made proposals for taking them forward.

The Project Group has proposed that there should be a national model for joint administration, which incorporates the principles of flexibility and partnership and which builds on the arrangements currently being piloted to reduce delays under the Narey Reducing Delays initiative. It is important, as the Report recognises, that the new arrangements provide flexibility, so that Chief Crown Prosecutors and Chief Constables can develop local solutions jointly.

The Government have decided to accept this proposal. This partnership approach between the CPS and the police, reflecting the principles advocated by Glidewell and incorporating elements of co-location, common administration and integrated working, will provide the framework for better working relationships between CPS staff and operational police officers and ensure that the work of both agencies is more effective. It will further streamline casework and file handling processes, remove duplication and unnecessary burdens, and reduce delay.

The new model for joint administration will also enable the police and the CPS to provide a better service to victims and witnesses, building on established arrangements and maintaining the co-ordination of victim and witness care.

A feature of the new arrangements is that the police will retain their responsibility for file preparation and witness warning, and that accordingly these responsibilities should not be transferred to the CPS as recommended by Glidewell. The Government have decided that it would not be practical, or a proper reflection of the respective constitutional priorities of the CPS and the police, to require a transfer of responsibilities. The new arrangements will, however, ensure closer co-operation between the police and the CPS and improved file preparation.

Chief Crown Prosecutors and Chief Constables will be asked to submit joint outline implementation plans by the end of November 1999 to a new inter-agency implementation group which we are setting up to oversee these new arrangements.

DEFENCE

Civil Servants (Appraisal)

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were the appraisal performance markings awarded to civil servants in 1998 for (a) each agency in his Department and (b) the Department broken down by (i) grade, (ii) gender, (iii) ethnicity, (iv) part-time/full-time working and (v) disability; and for (1) each agency and (2) the Department whether the Cabinet Office's four fifths rule for detecting potential adverse impact was applied to the appraisal markings of civil servants in the 1998 report round. [78147]

Mr. Spellar: I will write to my hon. Friend and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Weather Stations

Mr. Woolas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the height above sea level of the weather stations at (a) Ashover, Derbyshire, (b) Buxton, Derbyshire, (c) Slaidburn, Lancashire, (d) Emley Moor, West Yorkshire and (e) Sheffield Dore; and what is the average height above sea level for the Oldham, East and Saddleworth constituency. [80278]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Meteorological Office. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Ann Tourle to Mr. Phil Woolas, dated 19 April 1999:

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the height above sea level of various weather stations. This matter falls within the area of responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Met. Office. As the Chief Executive is on holiday at the moment, I am replying on his behalf.

The information you requested is given in the table.

Weather station	Height above sea level (metres)[1]
Ashover	178
Buxton	307
Slaidburn[2]	192
Emley Moor	259
Sheffield Dore[3]	206

[1] All heights refer to height above sea level of station rain gauge

[2] Station closed on 30 June 1996

[3] Station closed on 31 January 1985

I took advice from the Military Survey Agency on the average height above sea level for the Oldham East and Saddleworth constituency. Based on the mean of the highest and lowest points in the area, which are at Blindstones (541 metres) and Wellihole Bridge (148 metres) respectively, this is 344.5 metres.

Project Horizon

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on developments in Project Horizon. [81044]

Mr. Spellar: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence plans to meet his French and Italian colleagues shortly to discuss the way forward for the Horizon programme.

KPMG

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what (a) consultancy and (b) other contracts his Department has had with KPMG since 1 May 1997; and if KPMG is a prospective candidate for future contracts his Department is intending to let. [81419]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Bury St. Edmunds (Mr. Ruffley) on 22 February 1999, Official Report, columns 31–32. I can confirm that the company are prospective candidates for future contracts.

Territorial Army

Mr. Andy King: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what changes there have been to the plans for Territorial Army units and their locations contained in the Government publication, "Modern Forces for the Modern World: A Territorial Army for the Future". [81493]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Since the announcement on the structure of the Territorial Army on 17 November 1998, Official Report, columns 749–71, there have been a number of small refinements to the detailed plan. These involve some location changes and some changes in the timing of moves, and these are shown in the table. In addition, this opportunity is being taken to correct several typographical errors in the document and these too are shown in the tables.

Location changes

Kosovo

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the integration of the frigate Somerset into a French-led naval group off Kosovo, with particular reference to the role of (i) the WEU, (ii) NATO and (iii) the St. Malo Accords in the formulation of this policy. [81045]

Mr. George Robertson: HMS Somerset has been attached to the French Task Group, led by the French aircraft carrier FOCH, since 14 February and is scheduled to revert to national tasking shortly. The integration of Somerset was at the invitation of the French authorities immediately following the St. Malo Summit. Initially scheduled as a training mission to the Indian Ocean, the Task Group was diverted for operations in the Adriatic following the deterioration of the situation in Kosovo. The integration is purely a bilateral arrangement between the UK and France and has no particular reference to WEU or NATO.

The concept of a combined deployment is very much in the spirit of closer military co-operation between the UK and France, reinforced by the signing of the Letter of Intent at the St. Malo Summit in December 1998. It also takes forward the navy-to-navy Letter of Intent signed in 1996, which tasked our two navies "to continue to investigate the possibilities for the attachment of units for extended periods".

The integration is an excellent means to further strengthen our bilateral links and provides a practical dimension to the present debate on European security and defence.

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the refugee camps built by British forces in Albania and the former Yugoslavia as a result of the current Kosovo crisis; and if he will make a statement. [80925]

Mr. George Robertson: British Forces have assisted in the construction of the Bojane camp 15 km west of the Macedonian capital Skopje and the refugee handling centre 10 km north of Skopje consisting of the Brazde, Stenkovac and Eurotrade sites.

Service Personnel (Incapacity Benefit)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received concerning the eligibility for higher rate incapacity benefit of service personnel who are on sick leave when discharged. [80698]

Mr. Bayley: I have been asked to reply.

No such representations have been received.

On discharge from the forces, former service personnel who are sick or disabled can claim Incapacity Benefit. The short-term higher rate of Incapacity Benefit is payable after 28 weeks and the long-term rate after 52 weeks.

Periods of sickness before discharge do not count towards the qualifying periods for the higher rates of Incapacity Benefit. Rules do, however, protect potential entitlement to the age addition payable with long-term Incapacity Benefit. For former members of the forces, it is the earliest date that the person became sick that is relevant in deciding entitlement to the age addition.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Football

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what requirements (a) exist and (b) he plans to introduce for staff who work with junior footballers to have qualifications in (i) first aid and (ii) vocational training. [79911]

Mr. Banks: The football authorities are responsible for the development of football in this country. The Football Association has developed coaching courses for coaches, teachers and those connected with junior football teams. These courses include in their curricula teaching and coaching techniques and principles of play, together with first aid training. The FA lays down specific requirements for those working in Centres of Excellence and Football Academies to hold the relevant qualifications. As part of the 'Charter for Quality', the FA will be introducing at the end of 1999 a national, voluntary, kite-mark scheme of 'Chartermark' clubs to recognise clubs in junior football that meet specific conditions, including the requirement that junior managers and coaches hold FA approved first aid and coaching qualifications.

PRIME MINISTER

Social Chapter (Civil Servants)

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list those elements of the Social Chapter which have been covered by letters sent out by Government Departments inviting civil servants to waive their rights under them. [80449]

The Prime Minister: There are no Social Chapter measures for which Government Departments have invited civil servants to waive their rights.

European Commission President

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Prime Minister what discussions the Government are having with the President-nominate of the European Commission on use of his veto in the selection of fellow commissioners. [81039]

The Prime Minister: The Amsterdam Treaty states that the nominee for President shall work with Member States to nominate other Commissioners by common accord. The Government will be happy to work with Mr. Prodi in the selection of UK nominees.

Treaty of Amsterdam

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Prime Minister what measures the Government are planning to mark final ratification of the Treaty of Amsterdam. [81040]

The Prime Minister: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office will issue a press release before the Amsterdam treaty enters into force on 1 May, outlining some of the key new elements. Other Government Departments may issue press releases highlighting areas where the Amsterdam Treaty will affect their departmental business.

Euro Task Forces

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list those UK-appointed members of euro task forces whose views on UK participation in the single currency are known to the Government. [81047]

The Prime Minister: In October 1997 my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer set up a Business Advisory Group (BAG), headed by Lord Simon, to advise on the practical issues associated with UK membership. Representative organisations were invited to send their own nominated members. Subsequently, working groups were set up to look at sectoral preparations. In total over 100 individuals and representative organisations were consulted in producing the outline national changeover plan.

BAG members were chosen as representatives of their organisations, not because of any particular view they hold on participation in the single currency. The organisations represented on the BAG are the Institute of Directors, Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales, Council for Travel and Tourism, British Bankers' Association, Association of Payment Clearing Services, British Retail Consortium, Confederation of British Industry, Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accounting, Trades Union Congress, Consumers' Association, British Chamber of Commerce, Association of Corporate Treasurers, Computer Services and Software Association, Bank of England, Association of British Insurers, Building Societies Association, Forum of Private Business, Federation of Small Businesses, Law Society, Engineering Employers' Federation, Hundred Group of Finance Directors.

Single Currency

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 13 April 1999, Official Report, columns 2–3, for what reasons the determining factor on any Government decision underpinning membership of a single currency is whether the economic case for the United Kingdom joining is clear and unambiguous rather than the constitutional and political implications of that decision. [81147]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to my statement in the House on 23 February 1999, Official Report, column 179, where I said:

> "I do not dismiss the constitutional or political issues . . . If joining a single currency is good for British jobs and British industry, if it enhances British influence and power, I believe it is right for Britain to overcome these constitutional and political arguments and fears behind them. For the very reason of the sensitivity of those arguments, we have said very clearly that the Government can recommend, but the people will decide in a referendum."

Macedonia

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Prime Minister what measures he is taking to extend the mandate of the UN Preventive Deployment Force in Macedonia; and what assessment he has made of the effect on efforts to achieve this on the number of UK troops in the region. [81248]

The Prime Minister: The Mandate of the UN Preventative Force (UNPREDEP) expired on 28 February 1999 because there was no consensus within the UN Security Council to renew its mandate. Its role was entirely separate from that of the NATO forces in Macedonia. As there was no UK contingent in UNPPREDEP, its demise has had no effect on the build-up of UK forces in Macedonia.

Correspondence

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Prime Minister when he expects to reply to (a) the letter from the hon. Member for North Essex concerning Reeves Transport Services Ltd and (b) the letters he has received from Reeves Transport Services Ltd. [81360]

The Prime Minister: I have replied to the hon. Member today. Similarly, my office has replied direct to Reeves Transport Ltd. today.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Sierra Leone

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if discussions on possible questions were held between a member of the Foreign Affairs Committee and (a) himself, (b) his other departmental Ministers, (c) his departmental parliamentary private secretaries, (d) his civil servants or (e) his departmental special advisers prior to his evidence sessions with the Committee in the course of its Sierra Leone inquiry. [76083]

Mr. Robin Cook [holding answer 11 March 1999]: No.

Special Advisers

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the total number of occasions when (a) departmental and (b) non-departmental special advisers have travelled abroad in an official capacity since 2 May 1997. [76829]

Mr. Robin Cook: Between 2 May 1997 and 28 February 1999, my special advisers have made visits overseas on 28 occasions in an official capacity. All travel complied with the requirements of the Ministerial Code and the Civil Service Management Code.

EC Budget

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if budget line A-3021 of the European Communities budget is open to organisations which advance the idea of a non-federal Europe. [80159]

Ms Quin: The Official Journal of the European Communities describes Budget line A-3021 as providing grants to organisations advancing the idea of Europe, in particular those working actively for European integration. There is no reference to the promotion of federalism in Europe.

Séminaire Franco-Britannique

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library a copy of the speeches delivered at the Séminaire Franco-Britannique sur l'Euro by representatives of the British Government. [80158]

Ms Quin: We are arranging to have copies placed in the Libraries of the House.

St. Malo Accord

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made in Franco-British co-operation since the signing of the St. Malo Accord. [80148]

Ms Quin: The St. Malo Summit identified a broad variety of areas for enhanced Franco-British co-operation: European defence, crisis management, common foreign and security policy, Africa, EU institutions, integrated transport issues, duty free, the entrepreneurship taskforce, the millennium bug, the Franco-British electronic village, dialogue 2000, Paris-London 2000, the audio-visual working group, and this year's British-French summit. The pace of progress will differ from subject to subject, but the summit gave considerable impetus to a closer relationship, and work is ongoing in these and other areas to ensure that there is the closest bilateral engagement.

In some aspects this has already yielded concrete progress—for example, the proposed joint Foreign Ministers' visit and Heads of Mission Conference in Africa took place in February and proved the effectiveness of such shared contacts on African issues. There have been very productive bilateral meetings between Ministers, including myself and M. Moscovici, my French counterpart, on 14 January, as well as between senior officials, and more are planned for the near future, for example, meetings between the Ministers of Tourism.

Falklands

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has made to the Government of Chile about the prospective removal of the Lan Chile air link to the Falklands. [80216]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We expressed our regret to the Chilean Government over their decision last December to ask Chilean carriers not to fly to the Falklands and said that we did not believe this to be justified. When we became aware recently that the Chilean Government were considering publishing a decree prohibiting Chilean carriers from flying to the Falklands, we told them that we would strongly regret such a measure. We are very disappointed that they have nevertheless published such a decree. Lan Chile have not been able to fly to the Islands since their contract with the Falkland Islands Development Corporation expired on 31 March. While we hope that they will be allowed to resume the flights, other options are under consideration. We are in close touch with the Falkland Islands Government on this.

Maastricht Treaty

Mr. Lilley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list decision-making powers which have been restored to the United Kingdom from EU institutions since the Maastricht Treaty came into effect. [80234]

Ms Quin: The issue of repatriation of powers from the EU to Member States was not on the agenda for either the Maastricht or Amsterdam IGCs.

The Maastricht Treaty, however, introduced the principles of subsidiarity and proportionality into EC law, both of which were given further effect by the Protocol agreed at Amsterdam. The principle of subsidiarity aims to ensure that decisions are taken at the most appropriate level in areas of shared competence between the EC and Member States. Its application is one way of ensuring that decisions are taken as close to the citizen as possible.

Written Answers

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs for how many written parliamentary questions he has referred the interrogator to a previous answer since 1 May 1997; and if he will break this down by subject area. [80451]

Mr. Robin Cook: The information requested is not kept centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate diversion of staff time.

Treaty of Amsterdam

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list each of the new responsibilities which he will assume when the signed Treaty of Amsterdam takes effect and for each (a) the likely effect on departmental staffing, (b) the bodies or persons in the European Union principally concerned and (c) the relevant section of that treaty and the consolidated treaties of the European Union and European Community. [80416]

Ms Quin: I do not expect implementation of the Treaty of Amsterdam to add significantly to my Department's responsibilities.

Peru

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the President of Peru on the release of prisoners found innocent by the Ad Hoc Commission. [80080]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We have made no representations personally to President Fujimori. However, during my visit to Peru in January, I discussed the issue with both the Technical Adviser to the Ad Hoc Commission, Dr. Gina Costa, and the Human Rights Ombudsman, Jorge Santistevan. During 1998, the Commission continued to recommend presidential pardons for applicants, and won the release of an additional 102 detainees, bringing the total of those pardoned to 462.

The British Embassy in Lima has raised this issue with the Ad Hoc Commission. We also intend to discuss this, and other human rights issues, with the Peruvian delegation in Geneva, in the margins of the Commission on Human Rights (22 March-30 April).

Arms Brokering

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions took place on the issue of brokering in the meeting of the Council of Ministers COARM working group on 18 March; and what position was taken by the United Kingdom representative. [81103]

Mr. Tony Lloyd [holding answer 16 April 1999]: There was no substantive discussion of the issue of controls on arms trafficking and brokering at COARM on 18 March.

We have already told EU partners that the UK welcomes the initiative taken by the German Presidency to discuss within the EU the question of uniform national controls on arms trafficking and brokering, and intends to participate constructively in the debate. We have also drawn the attention of EU partners to the proposals for national controls on trafficking and brokering as set out in the White Paper on Strategic Export Controls presented to Parliament by the President of the Board of Trade in July 1998 (Cm 3989), which differ in a number of respects from the initial Presidency proposals.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Macpherson Inquiry

Mr. Efford: To ask the hon. Member for Middlesbrough (Mr. Bell), representing the Church Commissioners, what assessment he has made of the implications for the Commissioners of the Macpherson inquiry recommendations; and if he will make a statement. [80536]

Mr. Stuart Bell: Ensuring equal opportunity and the demonstration of fairness in all aspects of conduct within the Commissioners' office is something the Commissioners and indeed all the other central Church institutions take extremely seriously.

The Commissioners have followed equal opportunity practice in their recruitment and promotion procedures for many years and equal opportunities training for those operating these areas has been provided. Human resources departments across the national Church institutions were merged in 1998 in anticipation of the creation of the Archbishops' Council from January 1999. Equal opportunities awareness training has been offered to all of the central Church institutions' staff and this year we introduced a new Equal Opportunities Policy.

The Policy states our belief that we benefit from a workforce drawn from a wide cross-section of the community and confirms our commitment to developing and supporting all staff. Particularly relevant to the question is the definition of and procedure for dealing with racial harassment; recruitment and selection procedures including advertisement in publications with a predominantly ethnic readership where those groups are under-represented in our workforce; and training in equal opportunity awareness.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Macpherson Inquiry

Mr. Efford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the implications for his Department of the Macpherson Inquiry recommendations; and if he will make a statement. [80520]

Mr. Meale: I refer to the answer which my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster gave my hon. Friend on 14 April 1999, Official Report, column 239–40.

In addition, the British Transport Police Service is currently studying Sir William Macpherson's report. It will be implementing any appropriate recommendations in a process of consultation with the rest of the police service. A team headed by Chief Officers has already been appointed to identify areas from the report that can be taken forward.

Vehicle Registration

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what percentage of vehicles below 1100cc were first registered before 1992. [79929]

Ms Glenda Jackson: At the end of September 1998—the latest date for which information is available—72 per cent. of vehicles licensed in the Private and Light Goods class at or below 1100cc were first registered before 1992.

Vehicle Emissions

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what plans he has to increase the fixed penalty levied on vehicles which fail to pass MOT emissions standards; [81050]

(2) what progress he has made on the implementation of roadside vehicle testing schemes; [81049]

(3) what plans he has to allow (a) environmental health officers and (b) traffic wardens to undertake roadside emission testing without a police officer present. [81051]

Dr. Reid: The trial scheme involving seven local authorities in roadside emissions testing has been running for just over a year. I am currently evaluating the results of their work and hope to make an announcement in due course about whether the scheme might continue.

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the average level of emissions per mile from cars of (a) under 1100 cc, (b) 1101–1500 cc, (c) 1501–2000 cc, (d) 2001–3000 cc and (e) over 3000 cc. [81257]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Department does not calculate the average emissions per mile for cars by engine size. Emissions of local air pollutants from all cars, regardless of their engine size, are regulated by the same mandatory emission standards.

But cars with larger engine sizes tend to consume more fuel and emit more CO_2 emissions, although emissions from different models with the same engine size can vary considerably, depending on fuel type, engine technology and vehicle weight. To illustrate this trend, the following table provides estimates by engine size of the average CO_2 emissions per kilometre from all new petrol cars sold in 1997, based on official fuel consumption tests using a combined driving cycle.

Engine size	Average CO_2 emissions (g/km)
up to 1100cc	139
1101–1500cc	160
1501–2000cc	193
2001–3000cc	241
over 3000cc	301

Air Quality

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what advice he has issued to local authorities on the use of equipment to monitor compliance with national air quality objectives for particles. [80783]

Mr. Meale: Part IV of the Environment Act 1995 requires every local authority periodically to review air quality in its area. The Air Quality Regulations 1997 prescribe air quality objectives for seven pollutants, including particles (PM_{10}), to be achieved by 2005. Local authorities have to consider the present quality of air and the likely future quality of air, and assess whether prescribed objectives are likely to be achieved by the end of 2005. To assist local authorities the Secretary of State has issued a series of guidance under section 88(1) of the Environment Act 1995. One of these guidance notes, "Monitoring for air quality reviews and assessments" LAQM.TG1(98), includes guidance on monitoring particles.

The Government recently published their proposals for review of the National Air Quality Strategy (NAQS), and, in particular, their proposals for revised and additional objectives for the pollutants. During the review process, as a result of the better understanding of the sources and types of particles in the UK provided by the work of the Airborne Particles Expert Group, it became apparent that the current PM_{10} objective would not be achievable in a number of local authority areas with any measures that are currently practicable. The Group's work also revealed the importance of non-UK sources and the limit to which local authority action could control levels of PM_{10}. The Government are therefore consulting on a proposal to replace the objective with the Stage 1 limit values in the EC Air Quality Daughter Directive, while retaining it as an indicative level. Discussions are also in progress with the UK's EC partners to explore ways of reducing the transboundary particle problem.

Should the Government decide to proceed with their proposal, such a change would have significant implications for the scale of work local authorities would need to undertake on the review and assessment of PM_{10} and the conclusions they reach. To help local authorities, and without prejudice to the outcome of the consultation process, my officials have written to local authorities with further information on how they might proceed with the review and assessment process ahead of a decision on the Strategy review.

Copies of the Secretary of State's guidance note and the further information provided by officials, both mentioned above, have been placed in the Libraries of the House.

Ruddy Ducks

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what advice he has received from (i) English Nature and (ii) other agencies regarding the cull of the Ruddy Duck; what advice he has received as to the cost of the cull; if he has put the contract for the cull out to tender; and what plans he has to take powers of compulsory access to enforce the cull. [80796]

Mr. Meacher: In July 1998, I set up a Task Force to advise on the action required in the United Kingdom to conserve the globally threatened white-headed duck. This Task Force included representation from English Nature, other conservation agencies and non-Governmental organisations. In January this year I accepted the recommendations of the Task Force that a control trial should be undertaken to test the feasibility of eradicating the UK's population of ruddy duck.

The cost of the control trial is approximately £800,000 over 4 financial years. The Central Science Laboratory has been contracted to undertake the work. An assessment of whether or not compulsory access would be required to ensure success in any future eradication programme is a key objective of the control trial.

Council Tax

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will publish the criteria which will be used to determine for capping purposes whether council tax rises are unjustifiable. [80788]

Ms Armstrong: My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister announced on 13 April 1999, Official Report, columns 50–51, that most local authorities have set sensible budgets this year and that we will not be capping any councils.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps his Department has taken to implement the recommendation of the Bates report on the PFI that it should conduct an urgent review into planning procedures. [81122]

Mr. Raynsford: In the light of the conclusions of the Bates report in June 1997, the Department discussed with the Treasury Taskforce and other Departments, the instances that had led to the Report's recommendation. The conclusion reached was that review of the planning system was not required but that my Department would work with other Departments sponsoring PFI projects as necessary to seek to resolve any difficulties that might arise in respect of the planning process. We will keep under review the need for guidance to clarify how PFI schemes can be taken forward efficiently within the existing planning system.

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects the Channel Tunnel Rail Link to be completed in its entirety; and if he will make a statement. [81352]

Dr. Reid: I understand from London & Continental Railways, the company contracted to build the whole of the Rail Link under the terms of the CTRL Development Agreement, that the first section (from the Channel Tunnel to Fawkham Junction near Gravesend) should be completed in 2003. They expect the second section (from Fawkham Junction to St. Pancras) to be completed in 2007.

Genetically Modified Crops

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the qualitative difference in terms of impact on the environment between the growing of genetically modified crops (a) in farm-scale field trials and (b) on a commercial basis. [81268]

Mr. Meacher: There should be no difference apart from one of scale. The genetically modified crops in the farm-scale evaluations will be grown under normal commercial conditions following the suppliers' recommendations and requirements for the use of seed and herbicide.

Rural Transport

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions in respect of the £50 million allocated in the 1998 Budget for rural bus services, how much has been spent, how much has been allocated but not yet spent, and how many extra bus journeys have run as a consequence of this extra money. [81264]

Dr. Reid: Of the £50 million a year for rural transport in the United Kingdom announced in the 1998 Budget, £37.5 million a year was allocated for rural bus services in England. Final figures for actual spend in 1998–99 are not yet available but local authorities have previously estimated that they would spend £25 million in that financial year, reflecting the fact that less than a full year was available for spend.

Results from an interim survey of local authorities shows that by the end of 1998–99 over 550 new services are being operated as a result of the new finance, with a further 740 services improved in frequency or coverage. We are undertaking with local authorities a fuller survey of the results of the new funding. Data on the precise number of additional bus journeys are not available.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the rural transport partnership scheme. [81265]

Dr. Reid: The Government have provided £4.2 million per annum for the Rural Transport Partnership scheme. The overarching aim of the scheme is to promote social inclusion by enhancing rural transport services and securing a long-term improvement in the accessibility of rural people to jobs, services and social activity. The Countryside Agency is working to stimulate interest in the scheme and is providing advice to prospective partnerships. A number of schemes have been accepted for funding, and I look forward to seeing the fruits of these partnerships soon.

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the steps taken since 1 May 1997 to reduce total carbon dioxide emissions from the transport sector. [81267]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Action to reduce CO_2 emissions from transport is a key element of our approach to tackling climate change. Since coming into office, this Government have taken a number of measures designed to reduce transport CO_2 emissions. These include the integrated transport measures detailed in last year's White Paper, "A New Deal for Transport", the proposed reforms of vehicle excise duty and company car taxation, and also raising the annual increase in fuel duty to 6 per cent. In addition, we fully support the European Union's strategy for reducing CO_2 emissions from cars, including the voluntary agreement with European car manufacturers, which commits them to a 25 per cent. reduction in average new car fuel consumption by 2008.

Sale West Race Course Estate

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which hon. Members have made representations to his Department in relation to the proposed transfer of the Sale West Race Course Estate, located in the Altrincham and Sale, West constituency. [81255]

Mr. Raynsford: In addition to the hon. Member, my hon. Friend the Member for Stretford and Urmston (Ms Hughes), has made representations in connection with the proposed transfer of the Sale West Race Course Estate.

Packaging Waste

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Elmet, (Mr. Burgon), of 28 January 1999, Official Report, columns 335–37, by what date consultation with EU member states relating to his proposed amendments to the packaging waste regulations is planned to begin. [81389]

Mr. Meacher: Some amendments have already been notified to the European Commission and others will be notified as soon as possible.

Countryside Agency

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list (a) the members appointed to the Board of the Countryside Agency, (b) the date of their appointment, (c) their salaries and (d) their other occupations. [81149]

Mr. Meacher: The members of the Board of the Countryside Agency are as follows:

Ewen Cameron FRICS DL (Chairman)
Cllr. Pam Warhurst (Deputy Chair)
Kate Ashbrook
Janet Bradbury
Right Rev. Alan Chesters
Martin Doughty
Dr. Victoria Edwards
Prof. Philip Lowe
Catherine Mack
Miles Middleton CBE FCA
Frances Rowe
David Woodhall CBE.

All appointments run from 1 April 1999. The Chairman's salary is £41,620 a year; Ewen Cameron does not intend to draw the full amount. The Deputy Chair's salary is £12,950 a year. All other members will receive an annual salary of £5, 975.

I will write to the hon. Member about Board members' other occupations after confirming the details with those involved.

Herbicides

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what research his Department has commissioned on the effects on biodiversity of the increased use of herbicides in farming. [81253]

Mr. Meacher: My Department, together with the Joint Nature Conservation Committee, commissioned a report on the indirect effects of pesticides, including herbicides, on birds which was published in 1997. Further research on this topic is being funded by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries, and Food which funds a wide programme of research on the effects of pesticides. My Department intends to commission a complementary study this year.

Railtrack

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what measures he will take, pursuant to the publication of Railtrack's Network Management Statement, to facilitate fulfilment of the proposed investment programme. [81356]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We made it clear at the National Rail Summit in February that the Government are prepared to work in partnership with the railway industry to deliver a better rail service and increased investment. But Railtrack must play its part in creating a high quality, high growth, high investment railway. We have appointed Sir Alastair Morton to lead the shadow Strategic Rail Authority, and Tom Winsor as Rail Regulator, to ensure that that investment is delivered.

Passenger Rail Franchises

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what are the key criteria for the renegotiation of passenger rail franchises; and if he will make a statement. [81362]

Dr. Reid: We announced at the National Rail Summit on 25 February that all requests for franchise re-negotiations will be judged against the following criteria: current performance; proposed accelerated or new investment; willingness to commit to a more demanding enforcement regime and higher quality standards; willingness to give passengers a greater say in the level and standard of services; willingness to commit to initiatives which would promote integrated transport; and value for the taxpayer.

Rail Summit

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the purpose of the rail summit next Spring, indicating the date on which it will be held. [81354]

Dr. Reid: The purpose of the next National Rail Summit will be to review progress with the rail industry's commitment to deliver real year-on-year performance improvements and to maintain the momentum created by the Summit on 25 February. No date has yet been fixed for the next Summit.

National Cycling Strategy

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will next publish an assessment of the National Cycling Strategy; and if he will make a statement. [81358]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Good progress continues to be made on achieving the objectives of the National Cycling Strategy (NCS). A second year report will be published shortly by the Department on behalf of the National Cycling Forum, which is co-ordinating and monitoring progress in implementing the NCS.

Railways

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what has been the growth in (a) freight and (b) passenger volumes on the railways since 1 May 1997; and if he will make a statement. [81355]

Dr. Reid: During 1997–98, freight tonne kilometres on the railway grew by 12 per cent. and total passenger journeys grew by 6 per cent. For the half year from April to September 1998, freight tonne kilometres grew by 7 per cent. and total passenger journeys by 5 per cent. over the corresponding period in the previous year. We are achieving our goal of winning more passengers and freight on to the railways.

Council Tax Rebates

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will introduce legislation to give council tax rebates to elderly people living alone. [81271]

Ms Armstrong: Elderly people who live alone, as with other single person households, are already entitled to a 25 per cent. reduction in their council tax. We believe that additional help with council tax bills should be given to people on low incomes through the means tested benefit system. There are already special provisions for pensioners which mean that they are entitled to council tax benefit at higher levels of income than most other people.

Lake Windermere

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he plans to make a statement on the review concerning the proposed 10 mph speed limit on Lake Windermere. [80810]

Mr. Meale: The Windermere Navigation (Amendment) (No. 2) Byelaws 1992 are before the Secretary of State for his decision whether or not to confirm them. We are considering representations from a large number of individuals and organisations and hope to make an announcement shortly.

GJW

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the meetings his Department has had with the lobbying firm GJW since 1 May 1997. [81583]

Mr. Meale: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to the hon. Member for Lewes (Mr. Baker) on 9 March 1999, Official Report, column 168.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Correspondence

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the hon. Member for Walsall, North will receive a reply to his letter of 9 March concerning a constituent (HO Reference 4068/99). [80800]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I wrote to my hon. Friend on 15 April.

Environmental Appraisals

Mr. Truswell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what environmental appraisals of policy his Department has (a) completed, (b) started and (c) planned. [79630]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to him by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions on 13 April 1999, Official Report, column 66.

Uninsured Vehicles

Mr. Caplin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many proceedings there have been at magistrates' courts for the offence of using a motor vehicle uninsured against third party risks in each of the past five years. [80471]

Mr. Boateng: The numbers of proceedings at magistrates' courts for the offence of using a motor vehicle uninsured against third party risks in each of the past five years, are given in the table.

Proceedings at magistrates' courts for the offence of using a motor vehicle uninsured against third party risks England and Wales

Year	Number of offences
1993	446,568
1994	446,559
1995	441,241
1996	415,015
1997 (provisional)	396,912

Macpherson Inquiry

Mr. Efford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the implications for his Department of the Macpherson Inquiry recommendations; and if he will make a statement. [80527]

Mr. Straw: I refer to the reply which my right hon. Friend, the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster gave on 14 April 1999, Official Report, columns 239–40. This referred to the Action Plan I published on 23 March containing the detailed response to the recommendations of the Macpherson Inquiry. That plan is a long term programme to deliver permanent improvements to policing in every area.

The plan makes it clear that progress on policing must be part of a wider context and commits the Government to setting out, over coming months, how they will take forward their wider vision of an anti-racist society. I have already announced that the Government will legislate to extend the Race Relations Act 1976 not just to the police service as the Inquiry recommended but across all public services.

I will take personal responsibility for oversight of this programme. I am, therefore, establishing a steering group which I will chair which will include members from the police service, other relevant organisations as well as substantial representation from minority ethnic communities. The steering group will meet for the first time next month.

The Home Office Management Board has been working since early 1998 on taking forward at corporate level the commitment to race equality within the department. The Departmental Race Equality Action Plan includes commitments by the Board agreed following its first race equality training day in October 1998. Since publication of the Inquiry report, the Management Board held a further race equality seminar on 25–26 March and identified progress to date and further action points to take forward the Departmental Race Equality Action Plan.

Treaty of Amsterdam

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list each of the new responsibilities which he will assume when the signed Treaty of Amsterdam takes effect and for each (a) the likely effect on departmental staffing, (b) the bodies or persons in the European Union principally concerned and (c) the relevant section of that treaty and the consolidated treaties of the European Union and European Community. [80414]

Kate Hoey: The Treaty of Amsterdam will, in general, have minimal impact on the responsibilities of my Department and its staffing. However, as my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary announced on 12 March 1999, Official Report, columns 380–82, we are seeking to participate in certain areas of co-operation hitherto embodied in the Schengen agreements which are being incorporated into the European Union Treaty framework. These are new areas of co-operation for the Home Office. It will not be possible to assess the resource and other implications of such participation until the necessary negotiations are concluded.

Consultations (Postal Costs)

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will pay the postal costs of voluntary bodies and registered charities requested to respond to Government consultation documents; and if he will make a statement. [80921]

Mr. Straw: When voluntary bodies and registered charities are invited to respond to a Home Office consultation paper, postal costs are not automatically covered. However, each case is considered on its merits, taking account of such factors as the scale of the consultation exercise and the nature of the information requested.

The Home Office does not pay postal costs incurred by organisations responding to consultation documents from other Government Departments. It is a matter for individual Departments to decide whether to cover these.

Ministerial Meetings (US)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many times Ministers in his Department met their counterparts in the US Administration between 1 January 1998 and 1 June 1998, indicating the dates and locations of each meeting, the Ministers involved and the name of the US counterpart. [80830]

Mr. Straw: I met the United States Attorney-General, Janet Reno, on 6 February 1998, during a visit to Washington, and have spoken to her by telephone from time to time.

Between January and June 1998, there have been no other meetings between Ministers in my Department and their United States counterparts.

Kosovo Liberation Army

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what staff under his control are engaged in monitoring criminal activity by elements of the Kosovo Liberation Army; what is the nature of that activity; and if he will make a statement. [81243]

Mr. Straw: The investigation of criminal activity is an operational police matter and responsibility rests with the Chief Officer of the force in the area concerned.

I am not aware of any evidence that members of the Kosovo Liberation Army are committing criminal offences in this country.

Mutual Legal Assistance

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 17 December 1998, Official Report, columns 726–27, if he will make a further statement on the Government's policy in respect of proposals discussed at the meeting in Brussels of the European Convention on Mutual Legal Assistance as they relate to the interception of communications. [81274]

Mr. Straw: I refer the hon. Member to the replies given to the right hon. Member for Penrith and The Border (Mr. Maclean) on 23 and 25 March 1999, Official Report, columns 176 and 384 respectively.

Prison Service (Portland)

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people are employed (a) directly and (b) indirectly by the Prison Service in the three prison establishments in Portland. [81254]

Mr. George Howarth: The information requested is given in the table.

Prison service staff employed at Portland prisons as at 31 March 1999

Prison	Number of directly employed staff	Number of indirectly employed staff[1]
Portland	285.5	71
The Verne	268	47.5
Weare	200	46

[1] These figures include: education staff, probation staff, healthcare staff, chaplaincy staff, drug counsellors, ship's crew (Weare), hairdressers and librarians. The figures do not include works contractors.

Braille Template

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress he has made on developing a Braille template to enable blind people to vote in person and unaided. [81066]

Mr. George Howarth: It has not so far proved possible to develop a practicable proposal, but I am always ready to consider suggestions in this area.

Polling Stations (Access)

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how much his Department has spent in each of the last five years on the making of grants to local authorities for the purpose of improving access to polling places; and how much he expects to spend in the current year; [81067]

(2) how many local authorities in each of the last five years have (a) applied for and (b) received grants for the purpose of improving access to polling places; and what was the average amount of grant paid to a local authority in each year. [81068]

Mr. George Howarth: The information requested is set out in the tables. These show grants from central exchequer for the purchase or hire of temporary ramps to improve access to polling places for the years from 1994–95 to 1998–99 and, separately, grants provided for polling screens adapted for use by disabled voters. These latter figures are available separately only for 1997–98 and 1998–99. There is no limit on the level of grants provided for these purposes and local authorities are actively encouraged to apply for them.

Grants for purchase/hire of temporary ramps

	1994–95	1995–96	1996–97	1997–98	1998–99

Augusto Pinochet

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he plans to exercise his discretion regarding the proposed extradition of Augusto Pinochet following the most recent decision of the Judicial Committee of the House of Lords. [81365]

Mr. Straw: I refer to the reply I gave on 15 April 1999, Official Report, columns 311–16, to my hon. Friend the Member for Halifax (Mrs. Mahon).

Remand Prisoners

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average time spent in prison on remand by those (a) under the age of 25 years and (b) of all ages; what percentage of those people are found guilty and given custodial sentences; what is the average age of remand prisoners; what plans he has to review the system of remand; and if he will make a statement. [81260]

Mr. George Howarth: Provisional information on the estimated average number of days in custody for untried and convicted unsentenced prisoners held in prisons in England and Wales in 1998, by age, is given in the table. During 1998, the average age of all untried prisoners was 29 years, whilst for all convicted unsentenced prisoners it was 27 years.

The available information on the numbers remanded to custody that subsequently received a custodial sentence is for 1997 and shows that 42 per cent. of all persons remanded were sentenced to immediate custody. This information is published in "Criminal statistics England and Wales" (table 8.8 of the 1997 edition), a copy of which is in the Library.

Remand decisions are a matter for the courts in the exercise of their judicial discretion in accordance with the Bail Act 1976. We have no plans to alter the present arrangements.

Home Office Business Plan

Mr. Salter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish a Home Office business plan for 1999–2000. [81479]

Mr. Straw: The Home Office Business Plan for 1999–2000 is being published today.

The Business Plan complements the Home Office Annual Report—published on 26 March—and provides a comprehensive picture of Home Office aims, objectives, resources, performance measures and targets for 1999–2000. This includes the high level Home Office targets set out in the White Paper "Public Services for the Future: Modernisation, Reform, Accountability. Comprehensive Spending Review: Public Service Agreements 1999–2002" published in December 1998.

Copies of the Business Plan have been placed in the Library and are available on the Home Office web site on the internet.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

National Overseas Debts

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list those countries that are classified as poor countries which have had national overseas debts written off within the last 12 months. [80641]

Clare Short: We classify poor countries as those listed in Part 1 of the Development Assistance Committee List of Aid Recipients. In the 1998–99 financial year the following countries benefited from debt write-offs for outstanding aid loans made by my Department.

Afghanistan
Antigua and Barbuda
Bangladesh
Barbados
Belize
Botswana
Cote D'Ivoire
Dominica
Egypt
Ethiopia
Gambia
Ghana
Grenada
Guyana
Honduras
Indonesia
Jamaica
Jordan
Laos
Malawi
Mauritius
Mozambique
Nicaragua
Pakistan
Peru
Senegal
Sierra Leone
Solomon Islands
Sri Lanka
St. Lucia
Sudan
Turks and Cairos Islands
Tonga
Western Samoa
Zambia.

Kosovo

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what steps she has taken to ensure that privately donated aid destined for refugees from Kosovo is not being delayed by unnecessary bureaucracy; and if she will investigate the reasons for a lorry loaded by NMT Crane Hire of Bedfordshire with aid not being allowed to leave Bishops Stortford for Albania during the past week. [81106]

Clare Short: My Department is taking an international lead in urgently working for organisation of the humanitarian relief effort for refugees from Kosovo. The problem to date has not been lack of resources but inadequate organisation. We have no knowledge of the problems to which the hon. Gentleman's questions refers.

We greatly welcome the spontaneous generosity of the British people but we are fully stretched attempting to improve the effectiveness of the international system.

We have discussed this issue with the Disasters Emergency Committee which is the alliance of charities co-ordinating private contributions for Kosovo. We are informed that even as organisational arrangements improve, the priority for private donations will be to receive financial contributions rather than material ones.

HEALTH

Nurses

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what provision has been made for funding courses for general nurses not in employment to convert to Level One. [80261]

Mr. Denham: In September 1998 we announced an investment of £50 million from the Modernisation Fund to support initiatives which widen access to nursing and midwifery diploma programmes. This funding is for the period 1999 to 2002 and covers the costs of enabling enrolled nurses to retrain/upgrade their qualifications and return to the National Health Service. The funding will also enable existing NHS staff (previously only available for Health Care Assistants) to access pre-registration nursing and midwifery diploma programmes. The cost of expanding part time and flexible pre-registration nursing and midwifery diploma programmes is also being met from this investment in order to give those who might not normally be able to access nursing and midwifery education, for example those with family responsibilities, the opportunity to do so.

Interstitial Cystitis

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what support his Department is giving to the sufferers of interstitial cystitis; how much funding his Department has donated in the last five years to research into the causes of interstitial cystitis; and what action his Department is taking to encourage research into the treatment of interstitial cystitis. [80237]

Mr. Hutton: The National Health Service provides investigations, care and treatment for people with interstitial cystitis. There is already a body of international research evidence published in the world-wide literature, and some NHS research has been supported through the NHS research and development levy. In addition, the Medical Research Council welcomes high quality research applications into any aspect of human health and regional offices of the NHS Executive run response mode funding schemes for NHS research proposals.

A and E Departments

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much money will be available to the accident and emergency departments at (a) Ashford, Middlesex Hospital and (b) St. Peter's, Chertsey Hospital in the financial year 1999–2000 in addition to the money allocated under his three year plan. [80428]

Mr. Denham: Negotiations with local commissioners about overall funding for the new combined Ashford and St. Peter's National Health Service Trust in 1999–2000 are currently being concluded.

The accident and emergency team led by Mike Lambert, accident and emergency consultant at Norfolk and Norwich Hospital, are presently reviewing bids for funds as part of the accident and emergency modernisation programme and final decisions will be taken shortly.

Multiple Sclerosis

Audrey Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the impact of multiple sclerosis specialist nursing on patient care. [80597]

Mr. Hutton: The Department has not made an assessment of the impact of multiple sclerosis specialist nursing on patient care. However, we will continue to liaise with the Multiple Sclerosis Society who have set up a £2 million fund for the development of specialist nursing.

Maternity Units

Audrey Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the (a) professional and (b) lay members of the intercollegiate working party convened to set criteria for the restructuring or closure of maternity units; and what are its remit and terms of reference. [80598]

Mr. Hutton: The Multidisciplinary Working Party to Consider Maternity Services is an intercollegiate working party set up by the Royal Colleges of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists, Midwives, and Paediatrics and Child Health.

The current membership of the Multidisciplinary Working Party to Consider Maternity Services is as follows:

Professor W. Dunlop FRCOG, Consultant Obstetrician and Gynaecologist (Chairman)

Mr. A. J. Evans MRCOG, Consultant Obstetrician and Gynaecologist

Mr. R. J. Porter FRCOG, Consultant Obstetrician and Gynaecologist

Dr. K. Dodd FRCPH, Consultant Paediatrician

Professor A. Wilkinson FRCPH, Neonatal Paediatrics

Ms H. Camm, Head of Midwifery Services

Dr. S. Downe, Research Midwife

Dr. G. Lewis, Principal Medical Officer, Department of Health.

The Working Party is not funded by the Department of Health. It is a new group and first met on 18 February.

The Working Party's current terms of reference are to set criteria for consideration when restructuring or closing maternity units.

Lamotrigine

Mr. Lock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many deaths have been reported to his Department since the drug, Lamotrigine, has been licensed for use in Britain arising out of or related to the use of this drug or arising out of or connected to side effects suspected to be related to the use of this drug; [67007]

(2) pursuant to his answer of 30 March 1999, Official Report, columns 656–57, on Lamotrigine, how many suspected deaths have been reported to his Department or the Medicines Control Agency arising out of or related to Lamotrigine. [80230]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 13 April 1999]: There have been a total of 1,333 reports of suspected adverse drug reactions (ADRs) made via the UK spontaneous reporting scheme (the Yellow Card Scheme) associated with lamotrigine, of which 42 were fatal. Eighteen of the fatalities were associated with convulsions (the condition for which the drug was prescribed) and therefore it is difficult to establish what role, if any, the drug played in these cases. In general, doctors are asked to report suspected adverse drug reactions via the Yellow Card Scheme and therefore it is not possible to definitely attribute causality. Factors such as the patients' underlying illnesses and other medication may have contributed to the reactions.

Primary Care Groups

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) Conservative, (b) Liberal Democrat and (c) Labour councillors have been appointed to primary care group boards. [81390]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is not available centrally. The details we are currently collecting on the composition of Primary Care Group Boards will not include party political affiliation.

Joint Investment Plans

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will set out the client groups that will be covered by the joint investment plans that health authorities and social services departments will be required to produce during 1999–2000. [81252]

Mr. Hutton: Health authorities and social services departments were required, by April 1999, to produce joint investment plans for older people, including those with mental health problems, with preparatory information to support the National Service Framework for mental health services. We are considering what other client groups will be covered from April 2000 and will issue guidance shortly.

Teenage Pregnancies

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects the Social Exclusion Unit to report its findings on the investigation into teenage pregnancies. [81071]

Ms Jowell: There has been extensive consultation with interested organisations and individuals from outside Government and with young people and parents on the Teenage Pregnancy report.

The report will be published shortly.

Emergency Contraception

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if emergency contraception will be available in the health shop scheme. [81072]

Ms Jowell: The first 20 "Walk-in" Centres will be set up during this year. Services provided in each centre will be based on an assessment of local needs, which may include the need for additional access to contraceptive advice or services.

TREASURY

Children's Tax Credit

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the rate at which a tax credit for pre-school children could have been introduced into the proposed working families tax credit if it were to be financed by not introducing the proposed childcare tax credit. [76100]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 11 March 1999]: The cost of the childcare tax credit in the Working Families Tax Credit is estimated to be about £200 million in 2000–01, the first full year of the tax credit. If the childcare tax credit within Working Families Tax Credit was not introduced and the money spent instead on an additional tax credit for children under 5, then, taking into account reductions in income related benefits, the credit could be set at about £5 a week on top of the rates announced by the Chancellor in the Budget.

Inland Revenue

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if it is the Inland Revenue's policy to warn taxpayers that they are likely to issue a section 20 Taxes Management Act 1970 notice in circumstances where a taxpayer appeals against a section 19A Taxes Management Act 1970 notice for information. [80256]

Dawn Primarolo: The powers in section 19A and section 20 Taxes Management Act 1970 are not mutually exclusive. However, the Inland Revenue would not normally issue a notice under section 20 in order to obtain information that they had failed to obtain under section 19A. Very rarely, it might become clear, after the taxpayer had appealed against a section 19A notice, that section 20 was in fact the more appropriate section to use. A notice under section 20 cannot be issued by an inspector unless the taxpayer has failed to take an opportunity to provide the information voluntarily, and may be issued only with the consent of an independent Appeal Commissioner.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much the Inland Revenue has paid in incorrect tax repayments as a result of processing errors since the introduction of self-assessment. [80259]

Dawn Primarolo: In 1997–98 the Revenue made 2.180 million self assessment repayments and a further 2.812 million in 1998–99, totalling £1.536 billion and £2.431 billion respectively. The Revenue has processes in place designed to ensure that its staff accurately capture information from returns on to their computer systems. It also has processes in place designed specifically to risk assess repayments both before and after they are issued. It has no evidence to suggest that tax was over or under repaid as a result of processing errors in other than a very small number of cases.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what Inland Revenue review process takes place to ensure processing errors are detected. [80258]

Dawn Primarolo: The Inland Revenue carries out various activities in Self Assessment to ensure that processing errors are avoided or detected. These include full training for staff on carrying out processing work, computer validations on the processing of information, reviews by staff to ensure they have captured information correctly, and quality monitoring of processing work after the event.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans the Inland Revenue has to improve the presentation of statements of account for self-assessment purposes. [80257]

Dawn Primarolo: The Inland Revenue has made a number of improvements to the presentation of the statements of account since they were introduced. Further improvements are planned before the next widespread issue of statements of account in January 2000. All improvements are subject to consultation with the main representative bodies, including accountancy bodies, and revised statements are tested for usability with taxpayers before changes are introduced.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of Inland Revenue correspondence from taxpayers is (a) replied to and (b) replied to with a substantive reply within 28 days. [80142]

Dawn Primarolo: The Inland Revenue does not publish its performance against annual targets until appropriate validation and checking of figures has been carried out.

On latest provisional information, the Department is on course to meet its 1998–99 target of 75 per cent. for providing replies to correspondence, which includes correspondence from taxpayers, within 28 days.

In 1997–98 the Inland Revenue dealt with about 85 million items of post. The Department provided a full response within 28 days in 74 per cent. of cases.[1]

Note:

Figures are for the Inland Revenue's network of local offices which is administered by ten Regional Executive Offices.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the Inland Revenue target for dealing with taxpayers' correspondence; and what is the procedure for opening and logging such correspondence. [80143]

Dawn Primarolo: The Inland Revenue target for dealing with correspondence within 28 calendar days, which includes taxpayers' correspondence, was 75 per cent. in 1998–99.

The target for 1999–2000 is under discussion. The final figure will be included in the Inland Revenue Plan which is expected to be published in May.

The Department has a procedure in place to measure performance against its customer service standard of responding fully to all correspondence within 28 days. The procedure involves offices sampling a representative number of items of correspondence over the year, and monitoring the time taken to provide a full reply to every question or issue raised.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which department of the Inland Revenue is responsible for the collection of form P14. [80584]

Dawn Primarolo: The local tax office is responsible for the collection of forms P14.

Capital Allowance

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the cost of (a) increasing the existing 40 per cent. first year capital allowance to 100 per cent. on a permanent basis and (b) the additional cost of extending these allowances to assets leased by SMEs. [R] [80495]

Dawn Primarolo: If the extension by one year of 40 per cent. first year allowances for SMEs announced in the Budget were made permanent and increased to 100 per cent., the additional Exchequer cost would be £0.75 billion in 2000–01 and £1.3 billion in 2001–02. From 2002–03, annual costs would decrease steadily to reach £0.5 billion a year.

The cost of extending these allowances to include assets leased by SMEs is not available.

Additional Personal Tax Allowance

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many (a) men and (b) women are currently entitled to the additional personal tax allowance; and how many of those men and women are (i) parents and (ii) carers; [80935]

(2) what is the current take-up rate of the additional personal tax allowance; and what estimate he has made of the additional cost should full take-up occur. [80936]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 16 April 1999]: I regret that no information is available on either the total number of people eligible to claim the additional personal allowance or on the proportion who are carers. Therefore no estimates can be made of the take-up rates or of the additional cost should full take-up occur.

Vehicle Excise Duty

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the impact of UK vehicle excise duty rates on the competitiveness of the UK haulage industry, with particular reference to the rates of duty for (a) 40 and (b) 41 tonne articulated lorries. [81359]

Mr. Milburn: In formulating vehicle taxation policy the Government give careful consideration to its overall effects on the UK road haulage industry.

Correspondence

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects to reply to the letter from the hon. Member for North Essex of 6 March concerning the road haulage industry and the Budget. [81361]

Ms Hewitt: I have done so.

Fixed Profit Car Scheme

Mr. Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to change the fixed profit car scheme in respect of the relationship between engine size and mileage rates. [81269]

Ms Hewitt: None.

Payroll Software

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which software house will be preparing the new Government-supported standard payroll software for small employers and at what cost to (a) the Exchequer and (b) the user. [80815]

Mr. Wills: I have been asked to reply.

There are a number of options available for delivering the Automated Payroll System (APS) which we are currently considering. No decisions have yet been made.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Macpherson Inquiry

Mr. Efford: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what assessment he has made of the implications for his Department of the Macpherson Inquiry recommendations; and if he will make a statement. [80529]

Mr. Hoon: I refer my hon. Friend to the written answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office on 14 April 1999, Official Report, columns 239–40.

Multi-disciplinary Partnerships

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to permit the development of multi-disciplinary partnerships in the legal profession; and if he will make a statement. [R] [81094]

Mr. Hoon: This is a matter for the legal professional bodies. The rules of the Bar Council and the Law Society prohibit such arrangements. The Bar Council has no current plans for change. The Law Society issued a consultation paper in October 1998 on the possibility of allowing solicitors to enter multi-disciplinary partnerships; the responses are currently being analysed. Under the Courts and Legal Services Act 1990, it could fall to the Lord Chancellor and the designated judges to approve any proposed changes to those rules, if such changes came into the scope of Schedule 4 of that Act.

Complaints Procedures

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to review the complaints procedures applying (a) to solicitors and (b) to barristers; and if he will make a statement. [R] [81095]

Mr. Hoon: Government plans for the handling of complaints about members of the legal professional bodies were announced during the Second Reading of the Access to Justice Bill on 14 April 1999, Official Report, columns 230–325. There is currently a good deal of public concern that the Office for the Supervision of Solicitors is failing to deal adequately with complaints. The Government share this concern. We therefore propose to establish a new post with the responsibility for setting targets for complaints handling and making recommendations about complaints systems. These powers would, however, be held in reserve unless and until the professions are seen not to be making real progress; that progress will be measured against targets which the bodies would be encouraged to set. The new powers would cover all the authorised bodies including the Law Society, the Bar Council and the Institute of Legal Executives.

Barristers (Limited Liability)

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to permit barristers to practise in (a) partnerships and (b) limited liability companies; and if he will make a statement. [81094]

Mr. Hoon: This is a matter for the General Council of the Bar. Practising barristers are currently prohibited by their professional rules from entering into partnerships. Under the Courts and Legal Services Act 1990, it could fall to the Lord Chancellor and the designated judges to approve any proposed changes to those rules, if such changes came into the scope of Schedule 4 of that Act.

Stow-on-the-Wold Magistrates Court

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what representations he has received from (a) Gloucestershire County Council and (b) other parties opposing the proposed closure of Stow-on-the-Wold Magistrates Court; when he expects to make a final decision on the future of that court; and if he will make a statement. [81259]

Mr. Hoon: Gloucestershire Magistrates Courts Committee has determined to close the Stow-on-the-Wold Magistrates Court with effect from 1 July 1999. Gloucestershire County Council has appealed against this determination. A total of 21 other representation, opposed to the proposed closure, have been received.

The appeal process is proceeding. The two parties are being given the opportunity to put their case forward and make comments. This will continue until both parties are satisfied that they have nothing further to add. A final decision will not be made until that time. Magistrates courts are locally managed by magistrates' courts committee under the provisions of the Justices of the Peace Act 1997. Decisions concerning the future of magistrates courts in their area are for the relevant magistrates courts committee to determine. A local authority that contributes financially may appeal to the Lord Chancellor against a proposed closure. The procedure for such appeals is set out in section 56 of the Justices of the Peace Act 1997.

WALES

Primary Care Groups

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many primary care groups are operative in Wales; and if he will make a statement. [80837]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: On 1 April, 22 Local Health Groups became operational as sub committees of their health authorities. They are expected to make a major contribution in three main areas:

the development of health improvement programmes developing the principles of clinical governance to improve the quality of primary health care; and informing and developing the commissioning of hospital and community health services.

Local Health Groups are coterminous with unitary authorities, with representatives of the local authorities on their boards; which will allow for more effective use of resources across the range of health and social services expenditure.

Following the transfer of functions, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what (a) guidance and (b) new money he has given to primary care groups. [80836]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: Welsh Office guidance on establishing Local Health Groups was issued in October, followed by guidance on Remuneration and Human Resource, issued in December 1998.

£8.9 million previously used for the GP Fundholder Management allowance will be allocated to health authorities this year to cover the start up and operating costs of LHGs.

Following the transfer of functions, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

NHS Dentistry

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the level of NHS dentistry in Wales; and if he will make a statement. [80838]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: In Wales at the end of September 1998, 60 per cent. of children and 46 per cent. of adults were registered with NHS dentists, having visited them at least once during the preceding 15 months.

NHS net spending on general dental services in Wales in 1997/98 rose to £56.2 million, a 6 per cent. increase over the previous year. Over the same period, the number of courses of NHS treatment, for adults in Wales, rose by nearly 7 per cent. to 1.446 million. The number of dentists treating patients under NHS arrangements in Wales reached an all-time high of 960 by the end of 1998.

The Welsh Office dental initiative, first launched in 1995, has enabled Welsh Health Authorities to offer unprecedented levels of grant (up to £50,000 in some areas) to attract new dentists and for the expansion of the Community Dental Service. It has been very successful for Wales as a whole but there are still some areas where certain categories of patients may find it difficult to register with an NHS dentist close to home.

The initiative was modified and re-launched in July 1998. The modified scheme provides more flexibility in terms of the extent and length of commitment required and offers more flexible conditions which are specifically designed to address the particular problems of rural areas.

Following the transfer of functions, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Macpherson Inquiry

Mr. Efford: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the implications for his Department of the Macpherson inquiry recommendations; and if he will make a statement. [80531]

Ms Hodge: The Home Office published an Action Plan on 23 March containing the Government's detailed response to the specific recommendation of the Macpherson inquiry. The plan commits the Government to setting out over the coming months how they will take forward their broader vision of an anti-racist society.

The Government have already announced that they will legislate to apply the Race Relations Act 1976 not just to the police service, but across public services as whole. The Government are seeking to ensure that policy development takes account of any race equality implications.

There were three recommendations that related specifically to education and a detailed response to them is contained in the Action Plan.

In summary, the Government agree that the National Curriculum must properly reflect the needs of a diverse society and we are actively considering the recommendation for preventing and addressing racism in schools. Guidance will be issued to make it clear that schools must record all racist incidents and this information will be made available to parents, governors and Local Education Authorities. The Government do not, however, agree with the recommendation to publish the number of racist incidents on a school by school basis, which would risk discouraging the reporting of racist incidents. On inspection of schools, Ofsted will ensure that the important issues raised in the report are addressed during inspections and that appropriate training is put in place for Inspectors.

Work Permits

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many work permits were granted during the last 12 months. [80644]

Ms Hodge: During the 12-month period from 1 April 1998 to 31 March 1999 a total of 68,527 work permits were granted.

Grant Maintained Schools

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will state aggregated by local education authority and for the three most recent years for which information is available (a) the total annual maintenance grant paid to grant maintained schools, (b) the total annual maintenance grant paid to grant maintained schools divided by the number of pupils, (c) the total of special purpose and other non-capital grants paid to grant maintained schools and (d) the total of special purpose and other non-capital grants paid to grant maintained schools divided by the number of pupils. [80671]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 15 April 1999]: The calculation of the annual maintenance grants (AMG), and of the special purpose and other non-capital grants (SPGs) for Grant Maintained (GM) schools, has been a matter for the Funding Agency for Schools. I have placed in the Library tables which contain figures for the AMG by Local Education Authority, both in total and per pupil, for the years 1998–99, 1997–98 and 1996–97. The tables also give figures for SPGs, both in total and per pupil, for the years 1997–98 and 1996–97. These figures have been calculated using data recently provided by the Funding Agency.

School Budgets

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list for each local education authority in England for the three most recent years for which information is available (a) the budgeted expenditure per pupil and (b) the total budgeted expenditure within (i) the aggregate schools' budget, (ii) the general schools' budget and (iii) the general schools' budget allocated to capital charges. [80670]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 15 April 1999]: I have placed in the Library a table which shows, for each local education authority in England for the financial years 1996–97, 1997–98 and 1998–99, (a) the budgeted expenditure per pupil and (b) the total budgeted expenditure each within (i) the Aggregated Schools Budget, (ii) the General Schools Budget and (iii) the General Schools Budget allocated to capital.

New Deal (Young People)

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the average length of time spent on the Gateway of the New Deal for 18 to 25-year-olds by those (a) going directly into unsubsidised employment, (b) entering each of the New Deal Options subsequently chosen, (c) transferring to other benefits, (d) taking other options and (e) for whom no ultimate destination is known. [81110]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The information set out in the following table shows the average length of time spent on the New Deal Gateway by immediate destination, for those young people who had left the Gateway by the end of January 1999.

Destination on leaving the Gateway	Average length of time spent on Gateway (in days)

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what percentage of those joining each of the options of the New Deal for 18 to 24-year-olds in each month since January 1998 have had (a) no qualifications (b) foundation level qualifications, (c) NVQ Level 1, (d) NVQ Level 2, (e) NVQ Level 3, (f) NVQ Level 4 and (g) other qualifications. [81093]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The information is set out in the following tables and is drawn from data listing qualifications supplied by the participant.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the procedure under the New Deal for Young Unemployed for dealing with a person who disappears from an option and then returns to claim benefit. [81363]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Young people who return to claim Jobseekers Allowance within 13 weeks of leaving a New Deal option are taken back into New Deal. All cases are referred to adjudication for a decision on whether the young person had "good cause" for leaving the option early.

Action Zones

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment which of the first-round education action zones have applied to vary the details of their original bids; and if he will set out the details of such variations. [81144]

Ms Estelle Morris: None so far. Each EAZ submitted a detailed action plan on 31 March 1999. The action plans are currently being assessed and decisions on their approval will be made shortly.

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the time limits on the existence of the education and employment action zones. [80893]

Ms Estelle Morris: Education Action Zones are established for three years in the first instance. Zones which are successfully meeting their aims and targets for raising standards, and can continue to contribute significantly to raising standards, will be extended to five years; some may be extended beyond this.

Employment Action Zones will operate for two years in 14 areas, from April 2000, helping 48,000 long-term unemployed people find and keep work.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to his answer of 27 January 1999, Official Report, column 293, if he will list the expenditure by his Department, agencies and non-departmental public bodies on (a) market research, (b) conferences, (c) direct mail, (d) advertising and publicity, (e) web sites, (f) hospitality, (g) salaries and relevant expenses of administrative staff and (h) external consultants and advisers which is included in the expenditure on education action zones.. [81152]

(a) Market research	0
(b) Conferences	254,735
(c) Direct mail	3,496
(d) Advertising and publicity	124,825

[1] Before Local Government re-organisation of April 1998.
[2] After Local Government re-organisation of April 1998.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list by local education authority (a) how many Key Stage One and Key Stage Two pupils in maintained schools were being educated in the same class in January 1999 and (b) how many pupils were being educated in mixed year group classes in maintained primary schools in January 1999. [80680]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 15 April 1999]: Information about the number of Key Stage One and Key Stage Two pupils who are being educated in the same class is not collected centrally. However, the following table shows the number of mixed Key Stage classes in primary schools in January 1999. This will include some mixed Key Stage Two and Key Stage Three classes. The proportion of pupils in mixed year classes has fallen in primary schools from 27 per cent. in 1998 to 26 per cent. in 1999.

Rainsford School, Chelmsford

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to his answer of 5 March 1999, Official Report, column 951, on Rainsford School, Chelmsford, when he expects to reach a decision on the appeal from Rainsford School, Chelmsford against the direction made by Essex County Council to admit a pupil, whose name has been sent to him, to that school. [81069]

Ms Estelle Morris: We asked Essex Local Education Authority to provide details on this pupil and their handling of the direction process, along with full information about alternative local schools, by Monday 15 March. The information requested was necessarily full and complex, and Essex LEA were not in a position to respond before Monday 12 April. Officials are now giving urgent consideration to the material provided to enable my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to make a decision as soon as possible.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Vitamin and Mineral Supplements

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what guidance he has given to the Ad Hoc Expert Group on Vitamins and Minerals on those sections of the Agriculture Committee's Fifth report of Session 1997–98 (HC 753) on Vitamin B6 which deal with the distinction between good and bad science; [80637]

(2) what guidance he has given to the Ad Hoc Expert Group on Vitamins and Minerals on those sections of the Agriculture Committee's Fifth report of Session 1997–98 (HC 753) on Vitamin B6 which deal with the use of inappropriate safety factors when assessing supplement safety. [80622]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 13 April 1999]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Bolton, South East (Dr. Iddon) on 15 April 1999, Official Report, column 320.

Government-funded Research

Ms Drown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much the Government spent in 1998–99 on research into (a) organic farming and (b) biotechnology. [80791]

Mr. Rooker: In 1998–99 the Government spent (a) £1.7 million on research into organic farming and (b) £52 million on agricultural biotechnology research. "Biotechnology" is defined by Government as the use of biological organisms, systems and processes to manufacturing and service industries.

Meat Hygiene Service

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received about the proposed Meat Hygiene Service charges; which organisations have expressed concern about their impact; and if he will make a statement. [81366]

Mr. Rooker: I have received a great many representations from within and outside of the meat industry on the proposed level of Meat Hygiene Service (MHS) charges for 1999–2000. The level of MHS charges to apply in 1999–2000 for hygiene/welfare inspection and for the enforcement of Specified Risk Material controls has yet to be decided. Ministers are still carefully considering proposals made by the MHS to ensure that they are fully cost justified. They will then be subject to full consultation with all plant operators. The results of the consultation will be reported back to Ministers who will then take final decisions on the level of rates to apply and their operative date.

Suckler Cow Quota

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what criteria are used to award suckler cow quota to (a) new entrants to suckler production, (b) existing producers wanting extra quota and (c) dairy farmers seeking to convert to suckler production; and what rules exist regarding minimum and maximum amounts which may be awarded. [81373]

Mr. Rooker: Producers who meet strictly defined criteria may apply to the appropriate category of the Suckler Cow Quota national reserve for a quota allocation. Some of the categories cover new entrants and other existing producers wanting extra quota. There is no category which specifically covers dairy farmers seeking to convert to suckler production, although such producers may qualify under a category for first-time claimants. In addition, both new and existing producers are free to buy or lease quota from other producers.

The maximum amount of quota which may be allocated varies depending on the category applied to, the circumstances of the applicant and the availability of quota in the reserve. There are no rules governing the minimum amounts which may be allocated to a producer, but it is not possible to allocate less than 0.1 of a quota.

Further information is contained in the documents "Explanatory Guide to Suckler Cow Premium Scheme Quotas" and "Application for Quota from the National Reserve" which have been placed in the Libraries of the House.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Minister for Science

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which companies the Minister for Science has met (a) in his Department and (b) elsewhere since becoming a Minister to discuss genetically modified foods. [70440]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 11 February 1999]: In his capacity as Science Minister my noble Friend has met many companies inside and outside the Department. None of these meetings has specifically discussed genetically modified food policy.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if the Minister for Science has left the room on each occasion that genetically modified foods and crops have been discussed at meetings since his appointment; [73127]

(2) how many meetings the Minister for Science has attended where genetically modified foods and crops were discussed; on what dates; and if he will list those who attended these meetings; [73135]

(3) if the Minister for Science is permitted to take part in discussions on genetically modified foods and crops; [73128]

(4) what discussions on genetically modified foods or crops the Minister for Science has been involved in since taking office; [74220]

(5) if the Minister for Science participates in (a) decisions on genetically modified food policy, (b) discussions on genetically modified food policy, (c) discussions on genetically modified crop policy, (d) discussions on policy relating to genetically modified crops, (e) promotion of or support for British companies involved in genetically modified food or genetically modified crops, (f) decisions on Government biotechnology policy as it relates to agriculture and (g) discussions on Government biotechnology policy as it relates to agriculture. [74236]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 25 February 1999]: I refer the right hon. Member to the statements made by my noble Friend Lord Sainsbury on 31 July 1998 and 16 February 1999, copies of which I have placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will place the itinerary for the Minister for Science's visit to China and Korea in the Library; if he will list the (i) universities, (ii) scientific institutions, (iii) laboratories and (iv) companies which he visited; and what was the cost of the visit. [73021]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 25 February 1999]: My Noble Friend Lord Sainsbury visited Korea from 12–16 September 1998 and China from 16–18 September. The cost of his visit was £6,570.

In Korea, Lord Sainsbury co-chaired the Third UK-Korea Science and Technology Round-table with Minister Kang of the Ministry of Science and Technology. He held discussions with Minister Bae of the Ministry for Information and Communications and also with Kim Tae-dong the Presidential Secretary for Policy and Planning and with Chung Se-yung, Honorary Chairman of Hyundai Motors. In addition, Lord Sainsbury opened a seminar on Technology Transfer and Innovation in UK industry, attended the signing of a Memorandum of Understanding between the UK Biotechnology and Biological Sciences Research Council and the Korean Institute of Bioscience and Biotechnology, and made visits to the LG Corporate Institute of Technology, the Samsung Advanced Institute of Technology and to Yonsei University.

In China, Lord Sainsbury held discussions and signed a new Protocol on Scientific and Technological co-operation between the UK and China with Vice Minister Xu Guanhua of the Ministry of Science and Technology. He also signed a DTI/MOFTEC Memorandum of Understanding on Cleaner Coal Technology Research and Development with Vice Minister Long Yongtu and attended the signing of a co-operation agreement between the Institute of Electrical Engineers and the Chinese Mechanical Engineers Society. In addition, Lord Sainsbury spoke at a China-UK Technology Foresight Colloqium and at a seminar at Tsinghua University to launch co-operation on micro-satellites between the Surrey and Tsinghua Universities. He opened a Renewable Energy Seminar sponsored by DTI and the State Economic and Trade Commission; and launched the Sino-British Science and Technology Festival in the presence of Vice Minister Xu.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on how many occasions since becoming a Minister, the Minister for Science has in his official capacity met (a) Judith Portrait and (b) Christopher Skie. [74222]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 2 March 1999]: None.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many times the Minister for Science has met Mr. Christopher Stone, Director of Floranova, Innotech Investments and Gatsby Plant Science Innovations Ltd., since becoming a Minister. [75708]

Mr. Byers: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply I gave on 18 March 1999, Official Report, column 712.

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if any company, foundation or trust with which Lord Sainsbury is, or has formerly been, associated is planning to be involved in the commercial exploiting of genome research. [76076]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 11 March 1999]: All Lord Sainsbury's commercial interests were placed in the blind trust established when he was appointed as Minister for Science.

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what arrangements Lord Sainsbury has made to insulate himself from his former interests in the Gatsby Foundation. [76074]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 11 March 1999]: My noble Friend Lord Sainsbury has no financial interest in the Gatsby Charitable Foundation, which is a registered charity. He wrote to the trustees on 31 July asking them not to divulge to him any information about the Foundation's investments while he is in Government. He has chosen to take no part in the Foundation's grant decisions in this period.

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if Lord Sainsbury participates in discussions in the Cabinet Committee on Biotechnology in respect of the Human Genome Project. [76073]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 11 March 1999]: He does.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if the Minister for Science discussed biotechnology issues with Mr. Christopher Stone in his capacity as a board member of the Gatsby Trust. [78590]

Mr. Byers: No such discussions have taken place.

BBSRC Grants

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much grant in 1998–99 was given by the Biotechnology and Biological Sciences Research Council to (a) the John Innes Centre and (b) the Sainsbury Laboratory. [73037]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 25 February 1999]: DTI Ministers routinely respond to questions concerning the use of Science Budget money and the conduct of the Research Councils, but this Government, like their predecessors, support the Haldane principle that > "day-to-day decisions on the scientific merits of different strategies, programmes and projects should be taken by the Research Councils, without Government involvement"

(Paragraph 3.23 of the 1993 White Paper, "Realising Our Potential: A Strategy for Science, Engineering and Technology").

Accordingly, it is the BBSRC itself which decides the allocation of competitive strategic grant (CSG) to each of its eight Institutes, including the John Innes Centre. The Institutes are also able to apply for certain categories of BBSRC research grants, in competition with other researchers and subject to the approval of the Council's peer review committees. The Council does not allocate CSG to the Sainsbury Laboratory. The Laboratory is administered by the University of East Anglia and its staff are University employees. They are eligible to apply for research grants in the same way as academics elsewhere.

The table shows, for each year since 1996–297, the CSG approved by the Council for the John Innes Centre (including expenditure on equipment and minor works), and expenditure on research grants to the John Innes Centre and the Sainsbury Laboratory respectively, as approved by the BBSRC's peer review committees.

	Expenditure (£ millions)
	1996–97	1997–98	1998–99
John Innes Centre
(a) CSG	10.19	10.25	10.50
(b) research grants	2.41	2.55	2.21
(c) total	12.60	12.80	12.71
Sainsbury Laboratory (research grants)	0.28	0.51	0.64

Food and Crop Biotechnology (Genetic Modification)

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how the Government differentiate between genetically modified food and genetically modified crop biotechnology in determining departmental responsibilities. [74221]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 2 March 1999]: The responsibility for agriculture and food issues—including those relating to genetically modified crops and foods—rests primarily with the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food.

Other Government Departments also have a role. For example, the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions has primary responsibility for protection of the environment, and is therefore responsible for ensuring the safety of the release of genetically modified organisms—including genetically modified crops—into the environment. In this respect, DETR/MAFF act jointly on GM crop applications, with DETR taking the lead. Similarly, given the Department of Health's primary responsibility for human health, it acts jointly with MAFF on genetically modified food applications, with MAFF taking the lead.

The Office of Science and Technology seeks to ensure that there is effective co-ordination between Government Departments, and that the Government are receiving the best scientific advice.

Human Genetics

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if it is his policy that members of the Human Genetics Advisory Commission should avoid conflicts of interest. [79532]

Mr. Battle: It is important that advice is sought from those people best placed to provide it. The members of the Human Genetics Advisory Commission, therefore, have a range of backgrounds, experience, and interests. As with members of any public body, they are required to declare any personal or business interest which may influence their judgment and should follow all the appropriate guidance whenever a conflict arises.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 18 March 1999, Official Report, column 716, where the declarations of interest of members of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority and the Human Genetics Advisory Commission are available for public inspection. [79506]

Mr. Battle: I understand that a list is maintained at the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority at Paxton House, 30 Artillery Lane, London E1 7LS (Tel: 0171–377 5077). For the Human Genetics Advisory Commission a list is maintained by the secretariat at the Office of Science and Technology, Albany House, 94–98 Petty France, London SW1H 9ST (Tel: 0171–271 2131). I understand that both bodies intend to publish the list in their forthcoming Annual Reports.

Wellcome Trust

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to reduce uncertainty among scientists about the rules for submission and resubmission of applications for the Wellcome Trust funds from the Joint Infrastructure Fund. [80162]

Mr. Battle: Comprehensive information and details of how to submit applications to the Joint Infrastructure Fund are available from the Wellcome Trust in respect of the biomedical and biological sciences, and the relevant Research Councils in respect of all other areas of science and engineering. Any specific inquiries which universities may have about the Fund should be directed to them.

The Trust and Research Councils will accept submissions at any time up to a final deadline of 30 April 2000 for new buildings and refurbishment and 10 October 2000 for applications for equipment. Resubmissions are allowed only if expressly invited by the Joint Executive Committee of the Joint Infrastructure Fund, but this would be only under the most exceptional circumstances and is expected to be a very rare occurrence.

European Scrutiny Committee

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will produce an updated explanatory memorandum for the European Scrutiny Committee in relation to the draft End of Life Vehicles Directive. [80540]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 13 April 1999]: As the hon. Member is aware, the Environment Council meeting on 11 March decided to defer a final decision on the Directive until its next meeting on 24–25 June. No new issues have been raised which would merit an updated Explanatory Memorandum or Regulatory Impact Assessment. However, if an official text should emerge in the meantime, this will of course be deposited in Parliament and covered by an Explanatory Memorandum in the normal way.

Departmental Secondments

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the individuals seconded from his Department to the oil and gas companies or firms contracting for oil and gas companies since 1 May 1997. [80849]

Mr. Battle: Four secondments from my Department to companies in the oil and gas sector have commenced since 1 May 1997. They are:

Individual	Company to which they are seconded	DTI directorate from which they are seconded
Helen Hichens	Mobile North Sea Ltd.	Oil and Gas Directorate
Christopher Pook	BG plc	Ministerial Parliamentary Support Team
Anne Sherriff	BP Exploration	Finance and Resource Management
Ashley Malster	BG plc	Reform of Energy Regulation Team

My Department does not have details of the specific companies with which those in the oil and gas sector have current contracts.

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the individuals seconded to his Department from the oil and gas industry since 1 May 1997. [80848]

Mr. Battle: Four secondments into this Department from the oil and gas industry have commenced since 1 May 1997. They are:

Individual	Seconding company	DTI directorate to which they are seconded
Dominic McClafferty	European Gas Turbines (GEC Alstrom)	Export Promotion Directorate
Scott Hornafius	Mobil	Oil and Gas Directorate
Philip Haymes	British Petroleum	Export Promotion Directorate
Neil McMillan	Brown and Root AOC	Infrastructure and Energy Projects Directorate

Raw Milk (MMC Report)

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 13 April 1999, Official Report, column 94, when he will publish the MMC report on the supply of raw milk. [81109]

Dr. Howells: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry will publish the report as soon as is practicable.

MOX Fuel Shipment

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much extra training the armed United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority police who will accompany the shipment of MOX fuel from Barrow to Japan have been given; when this extra training was undertaken; what the cost was of the extra training; and if he will make a statement. [81080]

Mr. Battle: Officers of the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority Constabulary have been given comprehensive training, taking full account of their roles and responsibilities when escorting shipments of MOX fuel. The training package, including provision for regular refresher courses, was specially developed by the Constabulary and the Naval Recruiting and Training Agency and delivered under commercial contracts during the past year. Other specialist training has been carried out by the Northumbria Constabulary. Some officers have also completed advanced first aid courses. The costs of the training are a matter for the companies concerned.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many armed United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority Police will accompany each shipment of MOX fuel from Barrow to Japan; what weapons they will be armed with; when the first shipment is expected to leave Barrow; and if other countries will be informed in advance of the movements of these shipments through their jurisdictions. [81079]

Mr. Battle: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Stroud (Mr. Drew) on 18 January 1999, Official Report, columns 364–65.

For obvious security reasons details of physical protection arrangements for ships carrying MOX fuel are confidential. The timing of the first shipment is not yet finalised but the intention is to carry it out this calendar year. It has been our practice to inform coastal states, both on and off route, in advance and on a confidential basis, of the movement of High Level Waste shipments. In the case of MOX fuel shipments, we intend to continue this practice, consistent with our international obligations to protect information about the movement of sensitive nuclear materials.

Carers (Minimum Wage)

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to introduce a minimum wage for carers. [80766]

Mr. Ian McCartney: Carers aged 18 or over, who are workers, are already covered by the national minimum wage.

Consumer Affairs Council

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the outcome of the Consumer Affairs Council held in Brussels on 13 April; and if he will make a statement. [80762]

Dr. Howells: The Council unanimously adopted a Resolution welcoming the European Commission Consumer Policy Action Plan for 1999–2001. In an exchange of views on the Action Plan there was welcome for it and the importance it placed on integrating consumer concerns into other Community policies, in accordance with the Amsterdam Treaty.

During the orientation debate on the proposed Directive on the Distance Marketing of Financial Services, member states agreed on the need for a Directive, but there were differences as to its contents.

Spain called for action at Community level to restrict or ban the sale and marketing of videos and toys which encourage violent behaviour.

The Netherlands suggested that the Community should consider the implications for consumers of the millennium bug.

Science Enterprise Challenge

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the centres of enterprise to be endowed under the science enterprise challenge scheme. [80813]

Mr. Battle: The Science Enterprise Challenge competition is still in progress so it is not possible to list the centres at this point. The competition is in two stages. Stage 1 bids were due in on 14 April and the finalists to go onto stage 2 will be announced on 10 May. The winners will be announced this summer.

University Challenge

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the bids for the £50 million university challenge scheme referred to in paragraph 3.59 of the Red Book. [80814]

Mr. Battle: The 15 winners of the £45 million University Challenge competition, run jointly by Government, Wellcome Trust and the Gatsby Foundation, were announced on 10 March 1999. They are:

It is inappropriate to publish a list of all the original 45 bids as they were provided in confidence.

Local Support Centres

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what budget has been allocated to local support centres for (a) 1997–98, (b) 1998–99 and (c) 1999–2000. [81062]

Mr. Wills: The budgets allocated to the Department's Information Society Initiative Local Support Centres for the requested financial years are:

Year	£ million
1997–98[1]	2.77
1998–99[1]	2.00
1999–2000[2]	3.00

Commercial Debt (Late Payment)

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to make representations to the European Community on standardising late payment of commercial debt regulations across the Community. [81057]

Mr. Wills: The Government are working closely with their EU partners to tackle late payment at a European level so that small and medium enterprises (SMEs) can be sure of their rights wherever they do business in the EU and participate fully in the Single Market. We are actively involved in discussions on the proposed EU directive on combating late payment in commercial transactions which, we believe, should complement our own late payment legislation.

Working Time Directive

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list those areas for which extension of the Working Time Directive is currently scheduled for discussion at the European Council; for which a qualified majority of member states have already declared their support. [81227]

Mr. Ian McCartney: Negotiations on the extension of the Working Time Directive to those sectors which are currently excluded are continuing at working group level, and are not due to be discussed at the European Council. The agenda for the next Social Affairs Council meeting, which is due to take place on 25 May, has not yet been agreed.

Depleted Uranium

Ms Jenny Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what sites in the United Kingdom are licensed for storing depleted uranium. [81232]

Mr. Battle: A licence under the Nuclear Installations Act 1965 is not required for the storage of depleted uranium as it constitutes "excepted matter" under the Nuclear Installations Act 1965 (as amended), s26(1). However, material is stored at a number of nuclear licensed sites. Depleted uranium is used at a number of Ministry of Defence sites and by civil industrial operators who are registered by the Environment Agencies

(Environment Agency for England and Wales, SEPA for Scotland and the Environment and Heritage Service which is an executive agency for the DoE in Northern Ireland) under the Radioactive Substances Act 1993.

Ms Jenny Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what safety standards exist for the storage of depleted uranium. [81231]

Mr. Battle: The Health and Safety Executive regulates the storage of depleted uranium under the general provisions of the Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act 1974 and the specific requirements of the Ionising Radiations Regulations 1985 (SI 1985/1333). The Environment Agencies in England and Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland have responsibilities in respect of the Radioactive Substances Act 1993.

Arms Brokers

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what steps he has taken to establish a national register of arms brokers; [81100]

(2) what estimate his Department has made of the number of arms brokers operating in the United Kingdom. [81099]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 16 April 1999]: The Government considered the establishment of a register of arms dealers whilst developing proposals contained in the White Paper on Strategic Export Controls, but felt that it would be better to focus on the need to control specific trafficking and brokering activities. However, this issue was raised in response to the White Paper and, as my hon. Friend the Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Mrs. Roche) told my hon. Friend the Member for Wolverhampton, South-West (Ms Jones) on 14 December 1998, Official Report, column 364, we are reviewing all the proposals contained in the White Paper in the light of the responses received.

The Department of Trade and Industry has made no estimate of the number of arms brokers operating in the United Kingdom.

Strategic Exports

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of current (a) German and (b) US licensing requirements for arms brokers; and if he will introduce similar licensing requirements for arms brokers in his proposed legislation on strategic exports. [81172]

Dr. Howells: In their White Paper on Strategic Export Controls, the Government set out their proposals for new controls on trafficking and brokering. All the proposals contained in the White Paper are currently being reviewed in the light of the responses to it. Both in the course of drawing up the proposals and during our review, we have examined, where it is relevant to do so, the legislation and practice in other countries, including the US and Germany.

Scottish Power

Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he will announce his decision on Scottish Power's application to construct and operate an open cycle gas turbine generating station at Holybourne, Hampshire. [81487]

Mr. Battle: I have today decided to give a direction under Section 14(3) of the Energy Act 1976 to prevent the building of a 160 MW generating station to be fuelled by natural gas at the Holybourne Oil Terminal, Alton, Hampshire.

Copies of the Press Notice and decision letter are being placed in the Library of the House.

Export Controls

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if (a) tear gas and (b) plastic bullets are covered by the export control regime. [81273]

Dr. Howells: These goods, and others, are controlled under entries in Part III of Schedule 1 of the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994 as amended: tear gas under entry ML7; and plastic bullets under entries ML3 or PL5021.

However, a variety of devices may contain tear gas. Such devices are controlled under several other entries: for instance, portable anti-riot devices for administering an incapacitating substance under PL5001; grenades under ML4 or PL5030; ammunition under ML3 or PL5021; gas projectors or generators under ML2 or PL5018; under entries ML6, ML9, or ML10, gas projecting equipment for controlled ground vehicles, combatant vessels or aircraft, respectively, which are specially designed or modified for military use; and portable devices designed for self-protection by the administration of an incapacitating substance under entry 1A905 of the Dual-Use and Related Goods (Export Control) Regulation 1996, as amended.

It should be noted that other goods are also controlled under each of these entries.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Disabled People (Benefits)

13. Mr. Singh: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he is taking to improve the living standards of the poorest disabled people. [79740]

Mr. Darling: Our proposals for a new Disability Income Guarantee together with measures in the Welfare Reform Bill will provide more help for disabled adults and children who need help most.

36. Mr. Peter Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the steps he has taken to remove obstacles within the benefits system to people with disabilities who wish to train for, seek or undertake employment. [79764]

Mr. Bayley: We are removing barriers to work from the benefit system. We introduced a new 12 months linking rule for incapacity benefits last year, which removes the risk of losing money for people on benefits who want to try work.

We are also piloting, for a year, from 11 April 1999, a package of four measures in 15 areas to help people with disabilities, who want to return to work. The pilots will allow those on incapacity benefits to earn a small amount of money (up to £15) without losing benefit; and to test out a job for a trial period whilst remaining on benefit. The pilots will also allow access to a Jobmatch payment of £50 a week for people moving into part-time work; and a Jobfinder's Grant of £200 for those starting work.

All-work Test

15. Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on his proposals to reform the all-work test. [79742]

Mr. Bayley: There is a provision in the Welfare Reform and Pensions Bill to replace the All-work Test with the Personal Capability Assessment. We intend that, as well as determining entitlement to benefit, the Personal Capability Assessment will provide constructive information about what a person's medical condition or disability would allow them to do and advice on practical measures which might improve their chances of returning to work. This will enable personal advisers to help people identify and overcome the barriers they face and take steps back into employment.

30. Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many appeals are pending against refusal of benefit due to a failure to satisfy the all-work test; and if he will make a statement. [79758]

Mr. Bayley: As of 31 October 1998, there were 40,198 all-work test appeals pending in Great Britain.

New, streamlined arrangements for handling disputes and appeals are being introduced later this year under the powers in the Social Security Act 1998. These changes form an early part of the Government's long-term plan to modernise the social security system.

Note:

Figures include all cases lodged before 31 October 1998 and still awaiting a decision.

Medical Examiners

18. Mr. John Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to modify the role of medical examiners in benefit applications. [79746]

Mr. Bayley: We will be making minor changes to the role that examining doctors play in deciding entitlement to disablement benefits during the course of the year as part of our plans to modernise the decision making system. For all benefits where entitlement depends on a medical question, the examining doctor will act in an advisory capacity to the decision maker, providing expert medical advice to enable them to reach a correct decision on benefit entitlement. The aim will be to improve the quality of the decision and the level of information which we give to benefit claimants.

Fraud

23. Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to minimise fraud in the administration of housing benefit. [79751]

Mr. Timms: "Safeguarding Social Security", published last month, makes it clear that we want a benefit system which is secure from start to finish. This Government are committed to taking tough action against housing benefit fraud. We have already reformed the anti-fraud financial incentive scheme for local authorities to ensure they continue to be rewarded for detecting cases of genuine benefit fraud and cases where they identify that a claimant is no longer resident at an address. An additional £100 million will be made available to local authorities over the next three years to encourage them to adopt the Verification Framework. Through a series of additional checks, carried out throughout the life of a benefit claim, the Verification Framework will help to secure the administration of housing benefit. The Benefit Fraud Inspectorate is continuing to carry out a rolling programme of visits to local authorities. This will also play a key role in driving up standards of administration and security.

To secure the payment of housing benefit from the outset of a claim all local authorities have been invited to participate in the Royal Mail "do not redirect" initiative. This initiative prevents benefit claimants from using Royal Mail's postal redirection arrangements to make false claims to benefit from multiple addresses. To further streamline the administration of housing benefit, over £3 million has been made available this year to install computer terminals in local authorities which provide access to the Department's benefit systems. We are now looking to extend this initiative to include exchanging information electronically between local authorities and the Department, providing further scope to prevent fraud and error occurring in the first place.

26. Mr. Stringer: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what changes to procedures he proposes to safeguard the benefits system against fraud. [79754]

Mr. Timms: We are improving procedures and processes across the board to get claims right from the outset and then keep them right to reduce losses from fraud and error. It is vital that we secure the gateway to the benefit system. The initial step of checking a claim requires careful scrutiny of the evidence that must be provided by a claimant before payment is made. We have already tightened the gateway to Income Support and saved £200 million in 1998–99 alone.

31. Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on his plans to train and support staff to tackle fraud in the benefit system. [79759]

Mr. Timms: The Department is committed to training and developing all staff to deliver their jobs more effectively, in line with the principles of Investors in People. This commitment applies equally to our staff who tackle fraud in the benefit systems, and who through their administrative duties help in our prevention of fraud.

In October 1997 the gateway to Income Support was substantially strengthened by introducing more checks at points of known weakness. Staff were given over 200,000 hours of extra training on the new rules and this was supported by drawing together into a single code more than 450 separate instructions on how to check and process Income Support claims.

The Benefits Agency (BA) provides extensive training for counter fraud staff ranging from standard interviewing techniques through to specialist training in the law, surveillance and case preparation for the courts. In June 1997 we set up a joint development initiative between the BA and Local Authorities to establish commonality across a range of standards and training issues. In particular the Professionalism In Security (PINS) project is seeking to introduce a new package of accredited training that will lead to the award of a professional qualification in fraud investigation and will be recognised by both central and local government.

A foundation level training syllabus has now been finalised and contracts have been awarded for training to improve the professionalism of investigators and thereby to raise the status and profile of this group. In addition, over 50 students are already studying for Security Management certificates, diplomas and degrees offered by the University of Leicester.

Research and development work into an advanced level syllabus, a code of conduct, a code of good practice, a security management framework and centres of excellence is on-going.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the report of the Benefit Fraud Inspectorate into Area Directorate 3 of the Benefits Agency, with particular reference to (a) improving staff compliance with operating procedures and (b) encouraging co-operation between the Agency and local authorities; and if he will make a statement. [81112]

Mr. Timms: The fraud strategy paper published on 29 March, "A New Contract for Welfare: Safeguarding Social Security", highlights the weaknesses of the system that we inherited. The paper also sets out our strategy for dealing with those weaknesses, many of which have been highlighted in the Benefit Fraud Inspectorate's report.

The Benefits Agency is committed to improving standards and, in response to the issues raised in the BFI report, has produced a robust and detailed action plan which was published in the report. It has already taken a number of steps to improve staff compliance to administrative procedures and counter-fraud work. This action plan, together with an annual plan for the Area Directorate 3, will be reviewed regularly and rigorously to check that standards are achieved.

By working in partnership, councils and the Benefits Agency can fight fraud more effectively, as well as giving better service to the public. That is why we have earmarked funding in each Benefits Agency area to develop stronger links with local councils. Liaison between the BA and the local authorities is governed by Service Level Agreements (SLAs) at local level, based on national models. All SLAs have been revised recently and cover core activities on benefit administration and fraud and give each party a clear statement of how co-operation should work in practice.

Childhood Poverty

27. Ms Keeble: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proposals he has to tackle the problem of children growing up in poverty. [79755]

Angela Eagle: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Poplar and Canning Town (Mr. Fitzpatrick) earlier today, Official Report, column 567.

Child Care Costs

32. Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to assist parents seeking work with the costs of child care. [79760]

Angela Eagle: Parents need access to affordable, good quality child care to help balance work and family life successfully. We have already increased the help available for child care costs in the in-work benefits and the Government have introduced the Tax Credits Bill, which provides for a much more generous child care tax credit.

Pensions

33. Mr. David Heath: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what measures he has taken to monitor the mechanism by which the relative level of the state pension and associated benefits are calculated for (a) single pensioners and (b) pensioner couples. [79761]

Mr. Timms: The rate of Category B retirement pension (the "married woman's pension") has been set at about 60 per cent. of Category A retirement pension since it was introduced. We have no plans to change this.

Widows (Benefits)

34. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the number of widows who will suffer a reduction in their SERPS entitlement from April. [79762]

Mr. Timms: Information in the exact form requested is not available. The table provides forecast information on the average number of widows who could be affected at any one time in each year of the next 10 years. It should be noted that some of these people may have no SERPS entitlement and, therefore, will not be affected by the change.

	Potential number of widows affected (Thousand)
1999–2000	15
2000–01	50
2001–02	90
2002–03	130
2003–04	175
2004–05	225
2005–06	275
2006–07	330
2007–08	390
2008–09	450
2009–10	515

Notes:
1. Numbers are rounded to the nearest 5,000.
2. The proposed new schemes for widows and widowers under state pension age have not been taken into account, nor have the half rate inheritance changes beginning in April 2000.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what arrangements are being made to ensure that widows who have lost bereavement tax credit receive comparable benefits. [79750]

Angela Eagle: No one who already has the Widow's Bereavement Tax allowance will lose it. Anyone who claims the allowance before 5 April 2000 will receive it in the normal way—for the tax year they claim and the following year.

In the future, widows and widowers who are under pension age will be able to claim the new bereavement benefits, which will include the Bereavement Payment—a tax free lump sum of £2,000 payable to widows and widowers. This is double the amount of the current lump sum, Widow's Payment.

Welfare Reform

35. Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in what way the Government have taken into account the views of respondents to the consultation on the Green Paper on Welfare Reform. [79763]

Mr. Timms: Responses are assessed as individual policy areas are developed and announcements made.

Retirement Pensioners

37. Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the latest estimate of the numbers of retirement pensioners; and what estimate has been made of the number in 10 years' time. [79765]

Mr. Timms: For 1998–99, the estimated average number of pensioners is 10.7 million. The average for 2008–09 is 12 million.

Notes:

1. The estimates are for Great Britain and overseas.
2. The estimates exclude those receiving only Graduated Retirement Benefit.

Lone Parents

38. Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to introduce incentives to assist lone parents into employment. [79766]

Angela Eagle: The Government have introduced a number of measures to give all lone parents the opportunity to work.

In the Budget we announced plans to increase the support available to lone parents going into work. From this October, those getting Income Support will continue to receive that benefit for two weeks when they start work and claim Working Families Tax Credit. This will give real help with meeting expenses, including child care costs, in the period up to the first payday. At present, concerns about such expenses can deter lone parents from making the move into work.

The National Minimum Wage and the Working Families Tax Credit will help ensure that work pays for lone parents. We are also helping lone parents overcome the barriers they face in moving into work through the New Deal for Lone Parents and the National Childcare Strategy.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Pond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security which categories of disability living allowance recipients are exempt from the review process which replaces the benefit integrity project. [79734]

Mr. Darling: At the outset, certain groups of disabled people will not be contacted as part of the new periodic inquiry process. These include anyone whose case has been examined by the Benefit Integrity Project; anyone excluded from the activity of the Benefit Integrity Project; anyone with a fixed period award of DLA due to expire within the next three years, and anyone who is treated as being terminally ill within the Department's definition.

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will list for (a) Wales, (b) Scotland, (c) Northern Ireland and (d) each region of England, the number of disabled people who have been awarded disability living allowance since 1 June 1997 (i) on their initial application, (ii) at review and (iii) at appeal; [80938]

(2) if he will list for (a) Wales, (b) Scotland, (c) Northern Ireland, (d) England and (e) the United Kingdom, the number of people who applied (i) successfully and (ii) unsuccessfully in the last year for disability living allowance. [80940]

Mr. Bayley: The administration of Social Security benefits is a matter for Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Mark Oaten, dated 16 April 1999:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions asking if he will list for, (a) Wales, (b) Scotland, (c) Northern Ireland, and (d) each region of England, the number of disabled people who have been awarded disability living allowance since 1 June 1997, (i) on their initial application, (ii) at review and, (iii) at appeal, and if he will list for (a) Wales, (b) Scotland, (c) Northern Ireland, (d) England, and (e) the United Kingdom, the number of people who applied, (i) successfully, and (ii) unsuccessfully, in the last year for disability living allowance.

Environmental Appraisals

Mr. Truswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what environmental appraisals of policy his Department has (a) completed, (b) started and (c) planned. [79621]

Angela Eagle: I refer the hon. Member to the written answer from the Under-Secretary of State for the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions, my hon. Friend the Member for Mansfield (Mr. Meale), on 13 April 1999, Official Report, column 66.

Bereavement Benefits

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 19 March 1999, Official Report, columns 838–39, on bereavement benefits, if he will estimate the ranges of income from occupational pensions being received by the widows in receipt of such pensions. [80599]

Angela Eagle [holding answer 14 April 1999]: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the table.

Occupational Pensions

Mr. Sawford: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he is taking to increase the take-up of occupational pensions. [79743]

Mr. Timms: The latest National Association of Pension Funds Survey shows proportion of eligible employees joining occupational pensions schemes. For final salary schemes the figure has increased from 62 per cent. in 1997 to 86 per cent. in 1998. For Money purchase schemes the comparable figures are 68 per cent. and 75 per cent. In schemes where employers operate automatic entry the figures are over 90 per cent.

We want to do more to encourage people to join occupational pension schemes. In the Green Paper "A new contract for welfare: Partnership in Pensions", we have sought views on how to do this and on whether we should allow employers to require employees to be members of their occupational pension scheme, subject to the right for employees to opt out.

We are currently considering the responses we have received and will be formulating proposals to take action to improve take-up.

Mature Students (Housing Benefits)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on proposed improvements to the situation of those mature students who have recently forfeited housing benefits. [79851]

Angela Eagle: There has been no change in the position of mature students. Most full-time students, including mature students, are not entitled to housing benefit, although certain students in vulnerable groups, such as lone parents, can continue to claim this benefit.

Mental Illness

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to introduce safeguards in respect of the welfare of people with diagnosed mental illness in his benefits review process. [81357]

Mr. Bayley: From the beginning of this month, the Benefit Integrity Project was replaced by a system of periodic inquiry into Disability Living Allowance (DLA) entitlement. This is designed to be fairer to the welfare of vulnerable benefit claimants, including those with mental illness. We have discussed the operational procedures with disability organisations and we are aware that when contacting claimants, we need to take account of their individual circumstances and the effect that this contact may have. We are taking steps to ensure that any periodic inquiry literature issued to claimants, including to those who are diagnosed with a mental illness, is both clear and user-friendly, giving people the opportunity to discuss the best way of obtaining information as to their needs. We have also recognised the need to carry out specialised training on mental health issues for visiting officers and adjudication officers involved in the inquiry process. This training is planned to start in late May.

Certain types of case are exempt from action from the periodic inquiry from the outset. These include certain categories of mental illness, and the full list can be found in the pursuant answer to the hon. Member for Winchester (Mr. Oaten) on 10 March 1999, Official Report, columns 251–52.

We will continue to discuss the operation of the new arrangements with disability organisations, and will involve them in a comprehensive review of the new system at the end of the first six months of its operation.

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Macpherson Inquiry

Mr. Efford: To ask the President of the Council what assessment she has made of the implications for her Department of the Macpherson Inquiry recommendations; and if she will make a statement. [80538]

Mrs. Beckett: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to him on 14 April 1999, Official Report, columns 239–40, by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office. The Privy Council Office will participate fully in Government initiatives to improve the representation of ethnic minorities in the Civil Service. The Department has few policy responsibilities which impact directly on racism in society, but it does have responsibility for the appointment of High Sheriffs. There are currently no Sheriffs from the ethnic minorities, and the Privy Council Office wrote last year to the Shrievalty Association expressing concern. The Association has agreed to address this point specifically in guidance to their members, since under the relevant legislation it is for serving Sheriffs to provide nominations. My Department will continue regularly to monitor the position and to urge action where necessary.

Death Penalty (Commonwealth Countries)

Mr. Cox: To ask the President of the Council, pursuant to her answer of 13 April 1999, Official Report, column 29, if she will list the Commonwealth countries from which appeals and applications for leave to appeal in cases concerning the death penalty have been submitted; and if she will make a statement. [81579]

Mrs. Beckett: The information requested is as follows:

Country	Number of appeals	Number of applications for leave
Trinidad and Tobago	7	10
Jamaica	3	4
Antigua and Barbuda	1	—
Belize	1	—
St. Vincent and the Grenadines	—	1
Bermuda	1	—

NORTHERN IRELAND

Macpherson Inquiry

Mr. Efford: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment she has made of the implications for her Department of the Macpherson inquiry recommendations; and if she will make a statement. [80530]

Mr. Ingram: I have been considering the report into the brutal murder of Stephen Lawrence in the particular circumstances of Northern Ireland. The report focuses on the Metropolitan Police but it raises many issues for policing and, indeed, society generally. Many of the Lawrence report's recommendations are pertinent in Northern Ireland, not only in terms of how racial differences are addressed, but also in terms of divisions along religious and other lines.

The Government attach great importance to issues of racial equality in Northern Ireland and, in the context of policing, I welcome the first meeting of the Consultative Committee on Policing for Ethnic Minorities hosted recently by the Police Authority for Northern Ireland and the RUC. This Committee will do much to ensure the views of ethnic minority groups are fully understood and their policing needs met. It will develop a greater understanding in the police service of the problems faced by ethnic minorities and provide a means by which these communities can work with the police to provide a better service and have their problems addressed.

The Criminal Justice and Policing section of the Good Friday Agreement recognises that we have a unique opportunity to bring about a society,

"which will recognise the full and equal legitimacy and worth of identities, senses of allegiance and ethos of all sections of the community in Northern Ireland".

This is why the Government established the independent Commission on Policing and the Review of Criminal Justice, which will report later this year. The terms of reference of these two bodies cover many areas highlighted by the report into the murder of Stephen Lawrence.

None the less, there are a number of areas where I will want to see comparable changes to those set out in my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary's action plan for addressing the recommendations of the Lawrence report. On the application of not only race relations legislation, but all Northern Ireland's stringent equality legislation to the police, I want to see as full a coverage as possible. Northern Ireland is already a leader in providing statutory guarantees of equality of treatment and I want to build on this.

Improving community confidence in policing generally is an essential priority. The Police Authority has set an objective in the recently published Policing Plan requiring the Chief Constable to raise public confidence in the RUC in the year 1999–2000. However, in view of the recommendations contained in the Lawrence report, I will examine with the Authority and the Chief Constable what more might be needed to promote racial, religious, sex and disability equality and what meaningful measures can be adopted to ensure this happens. There should be no doubt of the Government's commitment to tackling all forms of discrimination.

Turning to the recommendations which affect police complaints and discipline procedures, we are making important changes. On independent investigations, we are pressing ahead with the establishment of a Police Ombudsman. This will provide for completely independent investigation of complaints against the police and will provide a model for other systems. We want this system to be as transparent as possible. We will also be introducing important reforms of the police conduct and performance procedures and will consider the further changes recommended by the Lawrence report in this area.

While first aid training in the RUC generally meets the standards recommended by the report, we are in touch with the RUC to ensure that any steps necessary to reduce intervals between refresher training are advanced as a matter of urgency. In other aspects of training, the police will build upon the initiatives taken as part of the Community Awareness Programme which already uses outside trainers from a wide variety of organisations. On inspection, similar changes to the role of Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary will be made in Northern Ireland in line with those being made by the Home Secretary.

The Report raises issues about communication between the prosecuting authorities and victims. In Northern Ireland, victims or their families are informed about the progress of their case by the RUC at key stages during the process, and by staff of the Department of the Director of Public Prosecutions in Northern Ireland if any decisions are taken once the case has actually come to court. The experience of those victims and witnesses who are made to feel particularly vulnerable because of the nature of the offence they are giving evidence about has been considered by a working group since last May. The group will be making recommendations to me in the summer as to how the criminal justice system might better assist such witnesses.

The Stephen Lawrence report highlights the need for co-ordinated action across the public sector if reforms are to be truly effective. For this reason the Government will be seeking to work closely with the new Assembly in Northern Ireland on those recommendations dealing with education and equality law. Consultation with bodies outside central Government will also be required. I have already initiated this action. On the application of the recommendations to those relevant parts of Government that will remain within my area of responsibility after devolution, I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office and Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on 14 April 1999, Official Report, columns 145–46.

The Government consider the protection of human rights, equality of treatment and respect for different cultures as fundamental aspects of the ethos of the police service in Northern Ireland. A service where, as the Chief Constable has indicated, there is no room for prejudice of any kind and cultural diversity is celebrated. The recommendations of the report on Stephen Lawrence will help us in pursuing this aim.

Maghaberry Prison

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many officer days have been lost through sickness and what percentage of officers at Maghaberry prison have (i) reported sick and (ii) been absent from work for reasons of illness or stress (a) over the last month and (b) over the same four week period in 1998 and 1997. [80603]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 16 April 1999]: The number of days lost to sickness in the period mentioned is as follows:

	Days
March 1999	2,128
March 1998	1,724
April 1997	1,634

Data for March 1997 are not available.

The average daily percentage of officers on sick leave against total staff in post during the three periods in question is as follows:

	Percentage
March 1999	12.58
March 1998	10.90
March 1997	9.48

The average daily percentage of officers on stress related sick leave against total staff in post during the three periods in question is as follows:

	Percentage
March 1999	2.59
March 1998	3.49
March 1997	1.58

Roads Service

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is her estimate of the savings which will result from the changes introduced into the organisational and regional structures of the Roads Service on the 1 April for the present financial year and the following two years; and to what use such savings will be put. [81159]

Mr. Paul Murphy [holding answer 16 April 1999]: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Roads Service under its chief executive designate, Mr. C Jones. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from C. James to Mr. William Ross, dated April 1999:

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has asked me to respond to your recently tabled Parliamentary Question about the reorganisation of Roads Service.

Like all public bodies, there is continuing pressure on Roads Service to make the best use of resources available to us. Since we were formed as an Agency in 1996, we have been committed to a programme of improving efficiency but have reached a point where further meaningful efficiencies could not be achieved without a reorganisation of our overall business. This reorganisation, which was introduced on 1 April 1999, was designed to provide a structure, comprising separate business units, which will enable us to focus more directly on how we can continue to deliver our services as efficiently as possible.

The main purpose of the reorganisation was, therefore, to provide a platform for future efficiencies and was not specifically geared to producing immediate savings. The reorganisation, by creating separate business units, will enable us to assess more effectively how efficient our work processes are compared to external organisations with a view to achieving further efficiency gains in future years.

I hope you find this information helpful.

Mr. Pat Finucane

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on her meeting with Mr. Param Cumaraswamy; and if she has agreed to establish a formal inquiry into the death of Mr. Pat Finucane. [81124]

Marjorie Mowlam: I met Mr. Cumaraswamy on Wednesday 14 April. A copy of the statement I issued afterwards is available in the Library.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Kosovo (Disaster Relief)

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment she has made of the speed of the disaster relief response to events in Kosovo; and if she will make a statement. [80786]

Clare Short: The international response to the massive refugee outflows was regrettably slow to start with. But the international community has mobilised substantial humanitarian assistance for the refugees in a remarkably short time. The UK has been at the forefront of efforts to speed up the relief operations, notably by providing logistical and other practical support (through airlifts, cargo handling equipment, transport assets, and logistics experts) to overcome practical constraints in assistance delivery.

Disaster Relief

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make it her policy to set up in partnership with NGOs a permanent disaster relief contact point. [80785]

Clare Short: We have an established and effective contact point for disaster and emergency relief in the Department for International Development's Conflict and Humanitarian Affairs Department. We are also working in close partnership with NGOs concerned with humanitarian assistance, and arrangements for regular contact are in place. I do not believe it would be useful to merge government and NGO response to disasters. My department is able to move very rapidly in the early stages, NGO response takes longer but is highly valued and creates aid outlets for public contributions. Both have important roles to play.

DEFENCE

Yugoslavia

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which weapons currently targeted on Yugoslavia contain depleted uranium. [81087]

Mr. George Robertson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Bristol, West (Valerie Davey), on 13 April 1999, Official Report, column 43.

Defence Council Instructions

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library a list of unclassified Defence Council Instructions which have been issued since 1 December 1998. [80827]

Mr. Spellar: There have been 314 unclassified DCIs issued since 1 December 1998 and I am today placing a list in the Library of the House.

PRIME MINISTER

Berlin Summit

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Prime Minister for which areas of gross receipts of EU moneys it was decided that the United Kingdom total would diminish as a consequence of the Berlin summit; by how much; and if he will make a statement. [81224]

The Prime Minister: The Berlin European Council decided the ceilings on spending across the EU on each major policy category. It did not decide how much was to be spent in each state: that is largely a matter for the Commission's management of the budget. While the Council did make decisions about the rules for allocating the structural and cohesion funds, the Commission has yet to announce the allocations from the Funds for each Member State. These figures will not be available until the regulations are finally approved in May.

Political Honours Scrutiny Committee

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Prime Minister what changes he has made in the composition of the Political Honours Scrutiny Committee. [81680]

The Prime Minister: Members are traditionally Privy Counsellors who are not members of the Government. Following the resignation of Lord Pym, I have appointed the Lord Hurd of Westwell to be a member of the Committee. He will join Lord Thomson of Monifieth and Baroness Dean of Thornton-le-Fylde. Lord Thomson has been appointed to chair the Committee.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Victims Liaison Unit

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much money has been allocated to the Victims Liaison Unit; and how much has been spent and on what projects. [80232]

Mr. Ingram: To date the Victims Liaison Unit has been allocated the £5 million announced by the Prime Minister in his statement of 12 May 1998. The Unit has been consulting widely with the victims community with a view to identifying needs and prioritising how this money can best be allocated. In the meantime, I have announced a number of significant funding initiatives to the value of £2,196,170, to support victims and a Newsletter outlining progress has been placed in the House of Commons Library.

The allocation to date can be summarised as follows:

Allocation	Amount
The Northern Ireland Memorial Fund	1,000,000
The Trauma Centre	700,000
The Educational Bursary Scheme	250,000
Community Groups Projects—to be administered by the Community Relations Council	200,000

Allocation	Amount
WAVE (to extend their outreach service)	30,000
Disability Action (a pilot scheme for disabled victims)	6,170
Survivors of Trauma (a pilot scheme for elderly, housebound victims)	5,000
Shankill Stress Centre (a pilot scheme for adolescent victims)	5,000

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Genetically Modified Crops

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for North Cornwall (Mr. Tyler) of 10 February 1999, Official Report, column 285, on research into the production of genetically modified grasses for grazing, what procedures would need to be adopted under what legislation for the production of such crops for (a) research, including legal grazing by animals and (b) sale for grazing; and what powers he has to prohibit such activity. [72181]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 22 February 1999]: All research releases of genetically modified organisms (GMOs) are governed by the Genetically Modified Organisms (Deliberate Release) Regulations 1992 (amended in 1995 and 1997) which give effect to Part VI of the Environment Protection Act 1990 and implement the EC Directive 90/220/EEC on the deliberate release into the environment of genetically modified organisms.

Anyone intending to produce or grow genetically modified grasses for research purposes requires a consent from the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions. This includes the requirement to carry out a detailed environmental risk assessment.

For grazing to be permitted on grasses grown for research purposes, the consent would have explicitly to include this permission. This would be allowed only where the applicant could show that such activities would involve negligible risk.

The sale of genetically modified grasses is governed by EC Directive 90/220 on the deliberate release of GMOs. No GMO may be sold without a consent issued under this Directive. A notifier may apply through any EC Member State, which then invites comments from all other Member States before an agreement is reached at Community level. The marketing consent is then valid across the EC.

The Secretary of State may prohibit or restrict the release of the GMO where information comes to light indicating risk to human health or the environment. Where this involves the sale of a GMO product, the provisional restriction must be cleared by the European Community in order to have permanent effect.

Speed Limits

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what measures he plans to take to raise public awareness of maximum national speed limits for various classes of road vehicles; and if he will make a statement. [79691]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Details of the national speed limits are contained in the Highway Code. The theory test for learner drivers of all classes of vehicles contains appropriate questions about different speed limits. Although we have no immediate plans to publicise vehicle speed limits more widely, we will look at the issue of vehicle speed limit signing as part of the wider review of speed management policy which is currently under way.

Crosby Driving Test Centre

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what information was provided to staff at Crosby Driving Test Centre, prior to its closure, concerning the future of the test centre and its staff. [80722]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Staff at the Crosby centre were kept informed about its future in the months prior to March 1998 by their line management, and relocations to neighbouring test centres in the event of Crosby closing were discussed. On 10 March 1998, the Driving Standards Agency's Northern Area Deputy Manager wrote to staff at the Crosby test centre. The note confirmed oral briefings the staff had already received from their local Supervising Examiner and provided an update about the imminent expiry of the lease on the centre at the end of March.

London Underground

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to establish a public interest company or trust for the London Underground. [81117]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Our plan is to implement a public-private partnership for London Underground. This will require changes to the structure of London Underground as a company, so that it becomes an operations business, responsible for operating train services and stations. It will remain in the public sector and will transfer in due course to the Greater London Authority and Transport for London, restoring local democratic accountability for its performance. We have no plans to establish a trust.

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if the financial advice given to his Department and London Transport indicated that a public private partnership for London Underground represented best value. [81116]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The financial advice which informed our decision to pursue a public-private partnership for London Underground suggested that this route was likely to offer best value. The reasons for the Government's choice of the option currently being taken forward by London Underground were set out in a paper, "London Underground Public-Private Partnership: Facts and Analysis", which was deposited in the Library on 20 March 1998.

London Transport

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 25 February 1999, Official Report, column 404, on London Transport, what is the asset value of buildings held by London Transport. [81115]

Ms Glenda Jackson: As at 31 March 1998, the total net value for the London Transport Group, net of depreciation and disposals and based on (1) infrastructure and other property and (2) assets in the course of construction, is £6,133.1 million.

Water Metering

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what consultations he has had with water companies and the Water Regulator about extending the scope of water metering to include homes which have undergone extensions and conversions since 1990. [80904]

Mr. Meale: Under the Water Industry Act 1991, water undertakers may fix charges by reference to such matters, and may adopt such methods and principles for the calculation and imposition of the charges, as appear to them to be appropriate. They therefore have considerable scope to extend metering to customers, including to those whose properties have been extended or converted since 1990.

However, clause 7 of the Water Industry Bill, currently before Parliament, would introduce a new right for households to remain on an unmeasured charge in their present homes, save where they are meeting certain conditions. My right hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment indicated during the Second Reading of the Bill, 7 December 1998, Official Report, column 46, that we envisaged the right to remain on an unmeasured charge would not apply where premises are used for commercial purposes, where there is a garden sprinkler or swimming pool use, where they have a power shower consuming more than 20 litres per minute or where there is use of a water-softening unit that requires backwashing.

Regional Development Agencies

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has had from each regional development agency concerning the budgets given to them by his Department; what his response has been; if he will list the regional development agencies with which his Department is in dispute over the budget allocation; what mechanisms he plans to introduce to enable regional development agencies to negotiate for their budgets in the future; what impact disputes between the regional development agencies and his Department on the budget allocation are having on the day-to-day running of the agencies; and if he will make a statement. [80795]

Mr. Meale: My right hon. Friend the Minister for the Regions, Regeneration and Planning has received a letter from the Chairman of the South West of England Regional Development Agency about funding for staff engaged on projects to regenerate the Royal William Yard, Plymouth and Temple Quay, Bristol. Discussions are taking place between officials of the Department and officers of the Agency and my right hon. Friend will reply to the Chairman as soon as these are complete.

There have also been contacts between officials in the Department and officers in other regional development agencies about their budgets. These discussions have been constructive and do not amount to our being "in dispute" with the agencies.

For future years, the agencies will bid for resources as part of an annual corporate planning round.

Water Charges

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to cap the prices charged by water companies which raise their charges by unjustifiable amounts; and if he will make a statement. [80787]

Mr. Meale: Water companies in England and Wales are subject to economic regulation by the Director General of Water Services. The Director General sets annual price limits and oversees the operation of the tariff basket, to which overall price limits apply.

Council Tax

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the (a) expected and (b) actual receipts from council tax for each year since the council tax was introduced. [80789]

Ms Armstrong: The information requested is in the table.

Expected receipts are the total amount that councils billed for, net of reliefs and council tax benefits, in respect of each financial year and do not, therefore, make an allowance for non-collection.

The actual receipts are the amounts received in each financial year against that year's council tax bills. Five authorities in 1994–95 were unable to provide this figure, so a figure of their total council tax receipts minus receipts for arrears has been used. The same applies to one authority in 1995–96.

£ million

	Expected receipts	Actual receipts
1993–94	7,349	6,807
1994–95	7,721	7,220
1995–96	8,220	7,770
1996–97	8,830	8,404
1997–98	9,562	9,134

Shorthold Tenancies

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to seek powers to prevent the practice of charging rent premiums on assured shorthold tenancy renewals; and if he will make a statement. [81143]

Mr. Raynsford: We have no plans at present to seek powers to prevent the practice of some landlords and letting agents charging fees to renew assured shorthold tenancy agreements. However, we will keep the situation under review and if there is clear evidence that there is significant abuse, we will consider whether anything can be done to prevent excessive fees from being charged.

Genetically Modified Organisms

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the objectors to the application to release genetically modified organisms in Monmouthshire. [81347]

Mr. Meacher: The objectors who wrote to the Department to raise concerns about the proposed release were private individuals and we do not have their authority to publish their names.

Greater London Authority

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to announce the interim location of the Greater London Authority. [81575]

Mr. Raynsford: I expect to be able to make an announcement shortly.

Dolphins

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will investigate the appearance on beaches in the South West of beheaded dolphins; and if he will make a statement. [81393]

Mr. Meale: The Department continues to contract the Institute of Zoology to post-mortem small cetaceans that strand around the shores of England and Wales. The two animals found since the beginning of 1999 on the south Devon coast, which were reported to have been decapitated, were not post-mortemed because they were in too decomposed a state to yield reliable results.

Pensioners (Fuel Poverty)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what measures the Government have taken to tackle fuel poverty in pensioner households. [80944]

Mr. Meale: We have taken a number of actions to help people suffering from fuel poverty, including pensioner households.

We have reduced the level of VAT on fuel, so that people can more easily afford to keep warm. We have also reduced the VAT on energy saving materials installed through Government grant schemes, so that they can more easily insulate their homes. We are now exploring with the European Commission the possibility of a wider reduction in VAT on energy saving materials.

We have released substantial additional funds to help improve our housing stock; in total some £5 billion is being made available over the lifetime of this Parliament for investment in housing. Most of the additional resources are going to local authorities and will be spent according to the needs and priorities identified in their housing strategy. We estimate that around one third of the money is likely to lead directly or indirectly to improvements in energy efficiency.

We have also allocated an additional £150 million specifically to tackling fuel poverty through domestic energy efficiency improvements. This is in addition to the existing £75 million a year expenditure on the Home Energy Efficiency Scheme, our main programme to help insulate the homes of the neediest householders.

But we recognise that many of today's pensioners face particular difficulties, and, in his recent Budget statement the Chancellor announced an increase in the annual Winter Fuel Payment to £100 for every eligible pensioner household.

We are additionally reviewing our fuel poverty policy, to establish how our increased programme can deliver more help to the most vulnerable households. My Department has held discussions with over 60 organisations active in this field. We will shortly publish our proposals on the way ahead for consultation, reviewing them in the light of responses, with the intention being to act as soon as possible thereafter.

Elderly People (Social Housing)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps his Department is taking to improve the provision of adequate social housing for the elderly. [80945]

Mr. Raynsford: Our aim is to offer everyone the opportunity of a decent home and so promote social cohesion, well-being and self-dependence. The provision of good quality, efficiently managed social housing plays an important part in meeting that aim for older people and for other groups.

Over the life of this Parliament, we are making an additional £5 billion available for housing in England, fulfilling our manifesto commitment on the release of capital receipts from the sale of council housing. Most of these additional resources are being directed through local authorities, who need to develop housing strategies for meeting the needs of all groups in their area including older people and to make investment decisions based on robust local assessments of housing need.

Organic Solvents

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what recent representations he has received concerning the incidence of serious illnesses amongst women employed in the electronics industry who are, or have been, exposed to organic solvents and other chemicals; and if he will make a statement. [81127]

Mr. Meale: I have received no recent direct representations on this subject. I am, however, aware of media interest and public concern surrounding the issue.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what information he has obtained concerning the possible link between the exposure to organic solvents of women employed in the electronics industry and the incidence amongst women of (a) leukaemia, (b) breast cancer, (c) other forms of cancer and (d) foetal abnormalities; and if he will make a statement. [81126]

Mr. Meale: Some organic solvents used in the electronics industry at exposure levels above the legal occupational exposure limits can cause a variety of known health effects, but the Health and Safety Executive believes there is no link with leukaemia, breast cancer or other forms of cancer.

There is a body of scientific literature suggesting a possible association between excessive exposure to various organic solvents and foetal abnormalities, but the evidence is inconclusive and it is not specific to the electronics industry.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what research he has commissioned recently on the effects on workers of the use of organic solvents in industry; and if he will make a statement. [81129]

Mr. Meale: Over the past three years, the Health and Safety Executive has commissioned much research on the effects on workers of the use of organic solvents.

Specific studies have included an investigation into spontaneous abortion in the UK semiconductor industry, an assessment of the hazards from cleaning chemical use in the catering industry, and the neurotoxicity of paint solvents.

Semiconductor Industry (Miscarriages)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the risk of miscarriage to women working in the Scottish semiconductor industry relative to that of women working in other industries; and if he will make a statement. [81150]

Mr. Meale: In 1998, the Health and Safety Executive published the results of an investigation into miscarriages among women in the UK semiconductor industry, a copy of which is in the Library. No separate assessment was made for women who worked in Scotland. The study found no evidence that the incidence of miscarriage in workers in the UK semiconductor industry was higher than the national average.

Railway Funding

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his oral answer of 13 April 1999, Official Report, column 5, what plans he has to issue a consultation paper on his proposals for the public funding arrangements for the railways; and if he will list the representations he has received on this matter. [81601]

Dr. Reid: We suggested in the White Paper (Cm 3950) "A New Deal for Transport" and in our response (Cm 4204) to the Environment, Transport and Regional Affairs Committee's Report on the Strategic Rail Authority and Railway Regulation that a proportion of access charges might be paid direct by the SRA rather than via the train operating companies. The Deputy Prime Minister asked the Rail Regulator for his views on the advantages and disadvantages of direct funding; we expect to receive them shortly. Since publication of the White Paper and our response to the Select Committee, we have received a number of representations on the public funding arrangements for the railways.

Steeply Sloping Plots

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if the definition of a steeply sloping plot within Part M of the Building Regulations which come into force in October will be based solely on the topography of the site. [81445]

Mr. Raynsford: The new Approved Document for Part M of the Building Regulations makes no reference to the topography of the site, as this will change with excavation and earth moving. A steeply sloping plot is defined as a plot gradient of more than 1 in 15. Plot gradient is defined as the gradient measured between the finished floor level of the dwelling and the point of access, which is the point at which a person visiting a dwelling would normally alight from a vehicle prior to approaching the dwelling. This point may be within or outside the plot. The guidance in the Approved Document anticipates that in most circumstances it should be possible to provide a level or ramped approach and a stepped approach would be the exception, used only when unavoidable.

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Millennium Compliance

Ms Dari Taylor: To ask the President of the Council what information the Government will be giving to the general public about the millennium bug; and if she will make a statement. [81699]

Mrs. Beckett: The public should look principally to goods and services providers for advice about the likely effect of the date change on supply. The Government and Action 2000 are encouraging organisations to communicate with their customers. For instance, the British Bankers Association, APACS and the Building Societies Association have published (on 5 March) "Your Money and the Millennium", reassuring customers that cash machines will work and that there will be ample supplies of bank notes, so that customers do not need to hoard them.

There is a role for the Government in bringing together basic information so that the public can have an overall picture of the likely impact of the Bug on their daily lives. In October 1998, Action 2000 published "Homecheck": this provided practical advice about the impact of the Bug on domestic appliances and PCs. The Government will build on this with the issue of further information, beginning in the late Spring, supported by limited TV and press advertising. This will cost around £5 million. The information will also be available from the Action 2000 Actionline and on its website.

The information programme will be underpinned by market research tracking changes in public perception of the Millennium Bug, particularly among key sub-groups like the elderly. The first results from this market research are being placed in the libraries of the House and published on the Internet today.

Action 2000 will continue to release information through the National Infrastructure Forum about the independent assessment of the readiness to meet the date change of providers of critical public services. It will also encourage them to communicate these messages to their customers. Action 2000 will be using press advertising to give this important information maximum publicity. This will cost some £2 million.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Landmark Projects

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) how much money the Millennium Commission has paid to external consultants in respect of each of the Landmark projects; [80693]

(2) what (a) external advice and (b) consultancy work has been procured by the Millennium Commission in respect of the Portsmouth Landmark Project; [80694]

(3) what advice and guidelines the Millennium Commission has given to local authorities involved with Millennium Landmark projects; [80700]

(4) what were the original guidelines agreed for Millennium Landmark projects; and which projects do not meet those guidelines; [80701]

(5) which members of the Millennium Commission have been involved in the Portsmouth Landmark Project; [80702]

(6) which Millennium Landmark projects will receive more than 50 per cent. of their funding from the Millennium Commission; [80703]

(7) how much money the Millennium Commission has (i) paid and (ii) agreed to pay towards the Portsmouth Landmark Project; for what elements of the scheme the money was paid; and what percentage this represents of the total cost of the project; [80704]

(8) what changes have been agreed with the Millennium Commission on the planned opening date for the Millennium Tower in Portsmouth since the project's inception; and what is the current target date; [80705]

(9) what are the expected completion dates for each Millennium Landmark project; [80706]

(10) how much money has been spent to date by the Millennium Commission on each Millennium Landmark project; [80707]

(11) if he will make a statement on the progress of each Millennium Landmark project. [80708]

Mr. Chris Smith: These are matters for the Millennium Commission. I shall reply to the hon. Member in my capacity as Chairman of the Commission, and place copies of my reply in the Libraries of the House.

Treaty of Amsterdam

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list each of the new responsibilities which he will assume when the signed Treaty of Amsterdam takes effect and for each (a) the likely effect on departmental staffing, (b) the bodies or persons in the European Union principally concerned and (c) the relevant section of that treaty and the consolidated treaties of the European Union and European Community. [80412]

Mr. Chris Smith: We do not expect the Treaty of Amsterdam to result in any significant new responsibilities for this Department. The Department regularly reviews its staffing arrangements in relation to European Union business but has no plans to alter these specifically in relation to the Treaty.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many parliamentary questions have been tabled to his Department for written answer on a named day since May 1997; and what percentage of them received a substantive reply on that day. [80730]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 15 April 1999]: Between 1 May 1997 and 15 April 1999, a total of 828 named day parliamentary questions were tabled for answer by my Department. Of these, 26 per cent. (214) received a substantive reply on the day requested.

HOME DEPARTMENT

National Family and Parenting Institute

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the constitution for the National Family and Parenting Institute; and if he will place a copy in the Library. [80812]

Mr. Boateng: The Government announced the establishment of the Trustee Board of the National Family and Parenting Institute (NFPI) on 15 March 1999. The NFPI is an independent charity which will be supported by Government funding of £2 million over the next three years. The NFPI has just been incorporated as a company. As such, the Memorandum and Articles of Association of the NFPI are a public document held at Companies House. I have requested that a copy be sent to the Library.

Body Piercing

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consultations he has had with local authorities concerning the body piercing of minors. [81422]

Mr. Boateng: In 1996, the then Government consulted on proposals affecting local authority control of skin piercing businesses. We have concluded that legislation which would give local authorities outside London powers to regulate cosmetic body piercing businesses, should be introduced as soon as Parliamentary time can be found. There has, however, been no consultation specifically relating to the body piercing of minors.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will introduce legislation to prohibit body piercing of minors without their parents' or guardians' consent; [81424]

(2) if he will list the statutory provisions which cover the body piercing of minors; [81423]

Mr. Boateng: Tattooing of children under the age of 18 is an offence under the Tattooing of Minors Act 1969. As regards the piercing of one person's body by another person, this could, in certain circumstances, be held to be an assault.

When it comes to other forms of body piercing, the question of what is a valid consent is governed by common law. Whether an offence has been caused therefore depends on the circumstances of each particular case. The degree of competence that can be exercised by children will depend in each case on the relative maturity of the child concerned, as well as upon his or her age.

In English law, the age of majority is 18 years. If a person under the age of 18 is capable of understanding the nature of the act that is being done, he or she is capable of giving a valid consent to it unless Statute provides otherwise.

Other types of body piercing, however, are not necessarily subject to these provisions. For example, children under the age of 16 cannot consent to what would otherwise be an indecent assault; whether an indecent assault occurred would depend on the facts of the individual case. Any establishment offering certain types of body piercing would, therefore, need to satisfy themselves as to the age of their customer and that he/she was capable of giving a valid consent.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received concerning body piercing of minors. [81425]

Mr. Boateng: We have received a small number of letters from Members of Parliament and members of the general public asking us to give further consideration to the introduction of the new legislation.

Tattoos and Piercing

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what regulations govern the minimum age at which a person can (a) be tattooed, (b) have their ears pierced and (c) have other parts of the body pierced. [80860]

Mr. Boateng: Tattooing of children under the age of 18 is an offence under the Tattooing of Minors Act 1969. There are no specific regulations setting a specific minimum age for other forms of body piercing. The question of what is a valid consent is governed by common law. Whether an offence has been caused therefore depends on the circumstances of each particular case. The degree of competence that can be exercised by children will depend in each case on the relative maturity of the child concerned, as well as upon his or her age. The Courts have held that if a person under the age of 18 is capable of understanding the nature of the act that is being done, he or she is capable of giving a valid consent to it unless Statute provides otherwise.

Other types of body piercing, however, are not necessarily subject to these provisions. For example, children under the age of 16 cannot consent to what would otherwise be an indecent assault; whether an indecent assault occurred would depend on the facts of the individual case. Any establishment offering certain types of body piercing would therefore need to satisfy themselves as to the age of their customer and that he/she was capable of giving a valid consent.

Lorry Drivers

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what advice he has obtained regarding the legality of demonstrations by lorry drivers. [81599]

Mr. Boateng: None. The enforcement of road traffic and public order legislation is an operational matter for individual chief officers of police. It is for them to enforce the law in the light of any action taken by lorry drivers.

Cleveland Police

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers in Cleveland Police Force are under investigation in the Redwood inquiry; how many have been charged; and if he will make a statement. [81165]

Mr. Boateng: The "Redwood" inquiry is an on-going investigation and, for operational reasons, it would be inappropriate at this stage to make any further comment.

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of serving CID officers in Cleveland Police Force are under investigation in the Lancet inquiry in the boroughs of (a) Middlesbrough, (b) Stockton, (c) Langbaurgh and (d) Hartlepool; and if he will make a statement. [81164]

Mr. Boateng: Operation Lancet is currently investigating 31 Criminal Investigation Department (CID) officers. Eight of the 31 are suspended from duty. The remaining 23 officers are currently serving as follows:

(a) 15 out of a total strength of 46 CID officers at Middlesbrough

(b) 1 out of a total strength of 30 CID officers at Stockton

(c) 6 out of a total strength of 32 CID officers at Langbaurgh

(d) None at Hartlepool

(e) 1 out of a total strength of 104 CID officers at Force Headquarters.

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the names of the police operations which are directed towards disciplinary offences in the Cleveland Police. [80798]

Mr. Boateng: The identity of police operations directed towards disciplinary offences is an operational matter for the Chief Constable of Cleveland, but it is well known that Operation Lancet is an inquiry into allegations of criminal and disciplinary offences against some Cleveland Police officers.

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers are working on the (a) Lancet and (b) Redwood inquiries into Cleveland Police; and if he will make a statement. [80797]

Mr. Boateng: There are 21 police officers currently working on Operation Lancet. Three of those officers are from Northamptonshire Police. I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave him on 13 April 1999, Official Report, column 11.

Immigration Services

Sir Nicholas Lyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the number of applicants who will seek to register with the Immigration Services Commissioner in the first year of operation. [81405]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: It is difficult to predict with any certainty how many immigration advisers will seek to register with the Immigration Services Commissioner in that body's first year of operation. Our best estimate is that about 200 individuals and organisations will seek to register.

Citizenship Ceremony

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce a ceremony to mark the award of UK citizenship. [81353]

Mr. Straw: As I indicated in a lecture on Citizenship which I gave in Liverpool on 12 April, I am in principle in favour of such ceremonies. I have asked officials to look into the possibility of introducing them into the United Kingdom. Upon completion of their examination, I shall make a statement to the House.

Immigration and Nationality Directorate

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the scanning of existing files in the Immigration and Nationality Directorate onto computer is scheduled (a) to commence and (b) to be completed. [80771]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: There has never been any intention of scanning onto computer all 4.5 million of the Immigration and Nationality Directorate's existing registered paper files.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of when the Immigration and Nationality Directorate will return to the level of casework it was achieving prior to the implementation of new work arrangements and its relocation to new offices. [80769]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: There are positive signs of improvement in many of the business areas of the Immigration and Nationality Directorate. But before accurate projections can be made of output of casework in a team-based environment, the recovery team I have established needs to review and collect further data on productivity. Projections of output improvement will be available in June.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many staff employed in the Immigration and Nationality Directorate have (a) resigned and (b) requested a transfer to another department in (i) the last six months and (ii) each of the last five years. [80767]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: A total of 112 staff resigned from the Immigration and Nationality Directorate in the six months October 1998 to March 1999. Resignations for the previous five annual years is as follows:

Year	Number
1998	363
1997	250
1996	149
1995	106
1994	110

The significantly higher 1998 figure can be attributed to a higher than usual number of resignations in the junior grade of Administrative Assistant. This is largely due to a significant increase in the number of casual staff employed during this period, a number of whom resigned during the period of their appointment.

Information on the number of staff requesting transfers to other departments for the periods specified is not available.

Hillsborough Disaster

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library a list of all the documents (a) which have been made available for public consultation in respect of the Hillsborough disaster and (b) which have since been withdrawn. [81111]

Mr. Boateng: Following the Home Secretary's announcement of the outcome of Lord Justice Stuart-Smith's scrutiny of the Hillsborough disaster, as much of the evidence considered by the scrutiny as possible was placed in the Library. The material is comprised of:

Transcripts of interviews with those who gave evidence to Lord Justice Stuart-Smith;

Other records of discussions held by Lord Justice Stuart-Smith, where transcripts were not made;

Written evidence provided to Lord Justice Stuart-Smith by witnesses;

Other written statements consulted at the request of the families;

Statements by South Yorkshire Police officers (in their original and amended forms);

Oral and written submissions made to Lord Justice Stuart Smith by Counsel and others on behalf of the Family Support Group;

Transcripts of Lord Justice Stuart-Smith's Open Meeting on 6 October and meeting with Counsel for the Family Support Group on 30 September;

South Yorkshire Police Operational Orders for the 1988 and 1989 semi-finals;

Statements by the Police Complaints Authority;

Report produced by David Phillips of Devon and Cornwall Constabulary at request of South Yorkshire Police;

Report by Noel Burne (structural engineer) at the request of South Yorkshire Police Authority;

Police videotapes TB1, 2, 3 and 4;

Written evidence provided to Lord Justice Stuart-Smith by those whom he consulted.

The names of those who gave written or oral evidence to the scrutiny, and those whom Lord Justice Stuart-Smith consulted, are set out in Appendix 1 of his report.

No documents have been withdrawn from the Library.

Crime Figures (Middlesbrough)

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish for the last six months Middlesbrough's monthly crime figures. [80799]

Mr. Boateng: The requested data are not available centrally. Recorded crime data for England and Wales for the 1998–99 year, which are collected quarterly by police force area, will be published by the Home Office in October 1999.

Police Scientific Development Branch

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in which scientific journals and other open publications staff from the Police Scientific Development Branch (Sandridge) have published papers since January 1997; and on what date the papers appeared in each of the journals and publications. [80831]

Mr. Boateng: The Police Scientific Development Branch has published the following papers since January 1997:

Kosovan Refugees

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what contingency plans he has to house Kosovan refugees in British seaside resorts; and if he will make a statement. [80906]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Government's priority remains to ensure that as far as possible, Kosovan refugees receive protection in the region so that they can return easily to their homes when it is safe for them to do so. However, contingency planning is well in hand if the United Kingdom needs to receive a programme of refugees from Kosovo.

We have no specific plans to house refugees in British seaside resorts, but are looking at accommodation throughout the United Kingdom that could be used for reception centres where refugees could be cared for prior to moving into more permanent accommodation.

Sergeant Virdi

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was (a) the time when (i) inappropriate material relating to Sergeant Virdi's case was created on the police computer system and (ii) Sergeant Virdi was recorded as acting as custody officer at Acton early on 24 December 1997, (b) the time when Sergeant Virdi was first (i) interviewed, (ii) cautioned, (iii) arrested, (iv) first and (v) last put under surveillance, (c) the time when inappropriate material was created on the police computer system in January 1998, and which officers were (i) interviewed, (ii) cautioned, (iii) arrested and (iv) put under surveillance; whether he received a report on the investigation and recording of the racial attack in 15 March 1998 in which Sergeant Virdi was an arresting officer; when and why Sergeant Virdi was reprimanded for maintaining his interest in the police activity relating to the racial attack; on which occasions Sergeant Virdi's senior officers used any independent element in investigating the events and complaints; what were the numbers and ranks of police officers involved in searching Sergeant Virdi's home on 15 April 1998, and the time taken in the search; what was the normal purpose and use of a POLSA search; and when and how material from Sergeant Virdi's locker at Hanwell was taken to the police station safe at Ealing. [80631]

Kate Hoey: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis tells me that disciplinary proceedings are still being considered in relation to Sergeant Virdi. It would therefore be inappropriate for me to comment: on the points (a)(i); (a)(ii); (c); (c)(i); (c)(ii); (c)(iii); (c)(iv); on the occasions when Sergeant Virdi's senior officers used any independent element in investigating the events and complaints: or on the numbers and ranks of police officers conducting the search of Sergeant Virdi's home on 15 April 1998.

In relation to points (b)(i); (b)(ii); (b)(iii); (b)(iv); and (b)(v), the Commissioner tells me that Sergeant Virdi was first interviewed at 1.39 pm on 17 April 1998, arrested and cautioned at 10.53 am on 15 April 1998, and put under surveillance on 15 April 1998.

The Home Secretary is not routinely informed of racial attacks and was not informed of the attack in Ealing Division. The Commissioner informs me that Sergeant Virdi has not been reprimanded in relation to this incident.

The Commissioner tells me that a POLSA search is one conducted by a team of officers specifically trained to national standards. POLSA teams have a role in counter-terrorist searches and undertake evidence gathering in searches in support of major investigations.

The Commissioner has confirmed that property was taken from Sergeant Virdi's locker at Hanwell Police Station and placed in the safe at Ealing Police Station. This has been reported as a theft by Sergeant Virdi and is under investigation. As at 15 April, it has not been established who moved the property and when it was moved.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Kosovans have appealed for asylum in the United Kingdom per month since 1 January 1998. [80448]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The available information given in the table relates to applications for asylum submitted from nationals of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia. To break this down into the number of Kosovans could be obtained only by examination of individual case records and is, therefore, available only at disproportionate cost.

Asylum applications[1] received in the United Kingdom, excluding dependants, 1998 and 1999, by month, nationals of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia

Immigration

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the number of applicants' passports held at the Immigration and Nationality Department awaiting a decision; what arrangements he will make for temporary travel documents to be issued for those whose applications are delayed as a result of reorganisation at IND; and what proposals he has for offering compensation to those who are disadvantaged as a result of the delays. [76615]

Mr. Mike O'Brien [pursuant to his reply, 18 March 1999, c. 720–22]: There are approximately 139,000 cases awaiting action in the Immigration and Nationality Directorate, of which approximately 22,000 contain passports. Travel Documents will be issued only to people who have valid leave to remain in the United Kingdom. It is, therefore, not possible to issue documents where an application for leave remains outstanding, although passports will be returned to applicants where they need to travel. Compensation will be paid only in cases of maladministration where the costs are reasonable and have been actually and necessarily incurred; each case will be treated on its merits.

TREASURY

Environmental Appraisals

Mr. Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to paragraph 5.81 in Budget 99 (HC 298), what detailed procedures will be followed to undertake the environmental appraisals. [81396]

Ms Hewitt: The procedures to be followed when undertaking environmental appraisals are set out in Government guidance on "Policy Appraisal and the Environment" (Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions, 1998). These guidelines make clear that a policy should be subject to a full environmental appraisal when it is likely to have a significant effect on the environment, and that the level of resources devoted to each appraisal should be proportionate to the policy or programme.

This guidance applies equally to the Budget measures, and it is the approach used when evaluating the numerous options which are considered in preparation for the Budget.

Financial Services Authority

Mr. Love: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the additional income and staff required by the Financial Services Authority if it assumes regulatory responsibility for loans secured on land as (a) first mortgages within the scope of the Council of Mortgage Lenders Code, (b) other loans secured on land with a value over £25,000 and (c) consumer credit loans with a value below £25,000. [81591]

Ms Hewitt: I have asked the Financial Services Authority to carry out this analysis and will take it into account in the review, to be carried out later this year, of whether mortgage advice should be regulated.

VAT Rules

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the procedure by which Customs and Excise informs businesses of changes to the VAT rules; and if he will make a statement. [81590]

Ms Hewitt: Customs and Excise use a variety of ways to inform business of changes to the VAT rules. In all cases, changes are notified by VAT Notes, which are sent to all VAT registered businesses. Changes which stem from the Budget are announced in Customs and Excise Budget Notices, available from local VAT offices on Budget Day, after the Chancellor has sat down. Other changes are notified to businesses by Business Briefs, also available from local VAT offices and issued to subscribers. All these publications are also available on the Internet.

National Insurance Contributions

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what systems are in place to enable his Department to notify self-employed people paying National Insurance contributions by direct debit, that those payments are not being received. [80934]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 16 April 1999]: The Department is not aware of any occasions where payments by direct debit, from self-employed customers, have not been received.

On those occasions when the Department, as a result of problems, has been unable to collect National Insurance Contributions from Self Employed Customers, it has identified and written to all those affected.

Cigarettes

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the average retail price of a packet of 20 cigarettes in each member state of the European Union. [81587]

Ms Hewitt: The information is as follows:

Cigarettes

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the proportion of the average retail price of a packet of 20 cigarettes which is taken in tax on each member state of the European Union. [81589]

Ms Hewitt: The information is as follows:

ISA Advertisements

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which authorised person under the Financial Services Act 1986 approved the Inland Revenue ISA advertisements. [81105]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 16 April 1999]: No such approval was needed.

KPMG

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what (a) consultancy and (b) other contracts his Department has had with KPMG since 1 May 1997; and if KPMG is a prospective candidate for contracts his Department is intending to let. [81421]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 19 April 1999]: The Treasury has let two contracts with KPMG since May 1997, one for consultancy on "Credit Risk Policy" for the Debt Management Office, and the other to carry out a telephone survey on "Small to Medium Enterprises".

KPMG is a prospective candidate for future contracts. The contracts cannot be disclosed as they are commercially confidential until an award has been announced.

Vehicle Excise Duty

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what investigations he carried out into the levels of emissions from cars of under 1100 cc before reducing the vehicle excise duty on those vehicles; and if he will make a statement. [81258]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 19 April 1999]: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor proposed reducing VED on the smallest cars in the 1998 Budget. He issued a consultation document setting out the options for reforming vehicle excise duty with the Pre-Budget Report in November last year and took into account a range of factors before deciding to reduce VED on cars under 1100cc by £55.

Public Appointments

Mr. Brady: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the public appointments for which his Department is responsible and which carry a fee or salary, indicating for each type of appointment the fee or salary band which applies. [80745]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 15 April 1999]: Much of this information is already available in Public Bodies 1998, copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

The majority of public appointments are unpaid as most of those who accept a public appointment do so on a voluntary basis. The details of those appointments to public (and other) bodies that attract a fee or salary, which Treasury Ministers are responsible for, are as follows:

Public Bodies

Body	Status	Appointment	Salary/fee
Bank of England Court	Public Corporation	1 Chairman	£227,000 p.a.
		1 Deputy	£191,500 p.a.
		1 Member	£153,000 p.a.
		1 Member	£142,167 p.a.
		1 Member	£142,167 p.a.
		2 Members	£125,500 p.a.
		12 Members	£500 p.a.
Policyholders Protection Board	Executive NDPB	5 Members	£200 per day
Financial Services Tribunal	Tribunal NDPB	1 Chairman	£380 per day
		2 Members	£275 per day
Section 706 Tribunal	Tribunal NDPB	1 Chairman	£900 p.a.
		8 Members	£500 p.a.

Non-Public Bodies

The Financial Services Authority (FSA) Board consists of an Executive Chairman, two other Executives, one non-Executive Deputy Chairman and 10 other non-Executives. Salaries and fees are set by the FSA. The details of these are published in the Annual Report, copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

Euro

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by what means he plans to enable businesses which wish to use the euro in Britain to do so; what estimate he has made of the cost of such measures; what plans he has to make it possible for businesses which wish to use other currencies to do so; and if he will make a statement. [80667]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 15 April 1999]: The introduction of the euro in 11 member states at the start of this year signalled a fundamental change in the business environment for UK firms. In recognition of this, the Government have taken a number of steps to facilitate UK business use of the euro. These steps are outlined in the regular Treasury report "Getting ready for the euro", copies of which are in the House Library.

Where there is demand, and where it is sensible, Government Departments and agencies already deal with UK firms in major foreign currencies.

New Bank Notes

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how long it takes the Bank of England on average to set up and print a new bank note after the initial design is completed. [76194]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 12 March 1999]: The set-up time from approval of note design to the issue of the note is dependent on the specification, the complexity and the required launch volumes. The duration of the origination and plate-making process, and the set-up and proof printing for the Bank of England and other Central Banks in general, is between four and five months. However, if the banknote contains features that require additional equipment, then the lead time of that equipment must be included. Specialist equipment lead times can be up to one year.

The actual printing can take up to eight months dependent on the number of notes required.

Euro Notes

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the approximate number of each denomination of sample euro notes printed by the Bank of England. [76196]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 12 March 1999]: The sample involved the Bank printing some 2 million each of the 20 and 50 euro notes and 5 million of the 5 euro note for pre-production trial purposes.

European Scrutiny Committee

Mr. Chope: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on how many occasions since 1 May 1997 his Department has made available to the European Scrutiny Committee (1) Council working documents; [80542]

(2) unofficial texts of draft European legislation. [80549]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 13 April 1999]: HM Treasury receives a large volume of both official, unofficial and working texts during the course of negotiations on EU legislation. In order to facilitate the work of the European Scrutiny Committee, Explanatory Memorandums are often submitted on the basis of unofficial texts if an official text, formally circulated to Member States from the Council Secretariat, has not yet been received. HM Treasury keep the Committee informed of substantive progress in negotiations by supplementary Memoranda or Ministerial letter, sometimes accompanied by a draft text if appropriate. It would involve disproportionate cost to provide a definitive list of the unofficial draft documents made available to the Committee since 1 May 1997.

Euro Task Forces

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the criteria for selection of members of the euro task forces. [81046]

Ms Hewitt: The Government have consulted widely in taking forward euro preparations. For instance, in October 1997, the Chancellor set up a Business Advisory Group (BAG), headed by Lord Simon, to advise on the practical issues associated with UK membership. Representative organisations were invited to send their own nominated members.

Red Book Changes

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list and quantify the revisions/forecasting changes referred to in Table 2.5 of the Red Book. [80865]

Ms Hewitt: Revisions to the forecasts of government receipts and expenditure since the Pre-Budget Report are shown in tables B11 and B13 of the March 1999 Financial Statement and Budget Report.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list and provide an explanation of the changes to the components of Annually Managed Expenditure referred to in paragraph 2.57 of the Red Book. [80859]

Mr. Milburn: Changes to the forecast of Annually Managed Expenditure since the Comprehensive Spending Review are listed and explained in paragraph 2.9 and table 2.2 of "Public Expenditure: Statistical Analyses 1999–2000" (Cm 4201), published in March 1999.

Government Debt

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the total level of Government debt in cash terms in (a) 1996–97, (b) 1997–98, (c) 1998–99, (d) 1999–2000, (e) 2000–01, (f) 2001–02, (g) 2002–03 and (h) 2003–04. [80889]

Ms Hewitt: The stock of public sector net debt at end-March 1997 is set out in the monthly Office for National Statistics First Release 'Public Sector Finances'. Estimates and projections of the stock of debt in subsequent years were published in table B8 of the March 1999 Financial Statement and Budget Report.

Public Sector Finances

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the figures used in preparing Chart 2.4 of the Red Book on the basis of (a) per cent. of GDP and (b) cash terms; and if he will estimate the effect of the same assumptions on the public sector net cash requirement over the same periods. [80866]

Ms Hewitt: Figures used in Chart 2.4 as a per cent. of GDP can be found in Table 2.6 of the Red Book and are reproduced from 1990–91 onwards in the following table. Figures for the cautious case can be calculated by applying the ready reckoners set out in Table 3.1 of 'Fiscal policy: public finances and the cycle', published on 9 March alongside the Red Book. Figures can be converted to cash terms using money GDP figures from Table 2.1 of 'Economic Trends', published by the Office for National Statistics, and Table B4 of the Red Book.

The cyclical behaviour of the public sector net cash requirement matches (with opposite sign) that of the current budget. Figures for the cyclically adjusted public sector net cash requirement can thus be calculated by applying the difference between the actual and cyclically adjusted surplus on current budget to the public sector net cash requirement (set out in Tables B26 and B27 of the Red Book). Figures for the cautious case and in cash terms can be calculated by use of the methods set out.

Engagements

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list his official engagements for 9 and 10 March. [80883]

Mr. Gordon Brown: I delivered the Budget statement in the House on 9 March. Over the two days referred to, I also had a number of meetings with ministerial colleagues and others.

European Central Bank

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 17 March 1999, Official Report, column 658, on the European Central Bank, if he has been informed of the salary of the President of the Bank. [80396]

Ms Hewitt: No. As I set out in my answer to the right hon. Member for Penrith and the Border (Mr. Maclean) on 17 March 1999, Official Report, column 658, decisions on the terms and conditions of employment of the ECB Executive Board, including the President, are for the ECB. There is no obligation on members of the ECB Executive Board to reveal details of their terms and conditions of employment, including their salaries.

Macpherson Inquiry

Mr. Efford: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the implications for his Department of the Macpherson Inquiry recommendations; and if he will make a statement. [80521]

Ms Hewitt: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to him by the Minister for the Cabinet Office on 14 April 1999, Official Report, columns 239–40.

Teenage Pregnancies (Wales)

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many births to girls conceiving under the age of 16 years there were in each local authority in Wales in each of the past 10 years. [81332]

Ms Hewitt: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Chris Ruane, dated 20 April 1999:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your recent parliamentary question on teenage births.

The numbers of girls who conceived at under age 16 and went on to a maternity are shown in the table. The areas shown for each of the years 1992–97 are the Welsh Unitary Authorities which were created in 1996. Information on a comparable basis is not readily available before 1992.

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many premature deaths there were in each local authority area in Wales in each of the past 10 years. [81337]

Ms Hewitt: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Chris Ruane, dated 20 April 1999:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your parliamentary question asking how many premature deaths there were for each local authority in Wales in each of the past 10 years.

Unemployment (Wales)

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many households without work for two years or more there were in each local authority in Wales in each of the past 10 years. [81336]

Ms Hewitt: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Chris Ruane, dated 20 April 1999:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your recent parliamentary question on workless households.

The Labour Force Survey (LFS) is the ONS's major source of labour market data. Data by local authority area is not available on the combined economic activity of household members, and categories such as that requested, would undoubtedly be too small to identify at local authority level for both reliability and confidentiality reasons.

Household datasets are available for spring 1990, each spring quarter from 1992 to 1994 and spring and autumn quarters since spring 1995. An article was published in Labour Market Trends (January 1999 issue), a copy of which is available in the House of Commons Library, giving a range of household data from the LFS using spring 1998 data. Table 8, on page 38, includes workless households by Government Office Region which may be of interest.

Single Currency

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the criteria to be used in determining whether the single currency is successful in accordance with paragraph 2.39 of the Red Book. [80858]

Ms Hewitt: A successful single currency will act as a complement to the Single Market. It will reduce transaction costs and exchange rate uncertainty on trade within the euro zone. It will make prices more transparent, boosting competition and providing new opportunities for companies to trade and invest. A successful single currency will also deliver its Treaty aims of price stability as a foundation for sustainable, non-inflationary growth.

WALES

Task Forces

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will list all those task forces and policy reviews with external members established by his Department since May 1997 which have set up (a) sub-groups, (b) working parties and (c) other subsidiary committees; [79256]

(2) if he will list for all task forces and policy reviews with external members established by his Department since May 1997 (a) their dates of establishment, (b) those which have issued final reports and their dates of publication, (c) those which have been terminated and their dates of termination and (d) for those bodies still in existence, expected reporting and termination dates. [79279]

Mr. Michael: I will write to my hon. Friend as soon as possible and place a copy of my reply in the Library of the House. In general, preparations for the advent of the National Assembly for Wales has led to a good deal of development work involving participants from business (employers and trade unions), local government and the voluntary sector. Generally, the groups which have been brought together to undertake this work have been short-term "task and finish" groups rather than formal bodies with sub groups or sub committees.

Small and Medium Businesses

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what initiatives he is taking to assist small and medium businesses; and if he will make a statement. [79844]

Mr. Hain: In line with the new economic agenda for Wales, Pathway to Prosperity, the Government are keen to secure a more dynamic and competitive business base in Wales. To this end increased resources—£83 million in 1999–2000—are being made available to back business development. This substantial budget will support a wide range of activity, including:

- increased resources for the TEC enterprise programme supporting over 1,000 new business starts; help for 2,000 firms to tackle the Millennium Bug issue; help for over 500 Sole Traders to take on their first employee; and assistance for over 2,000 firms in addressing skills development and other business growth issues.
- increased resources for Regional Selective Assistance which are expected to create or safeguard 12,000 jobs
- continuation of the Cymru Prosper Wales programme to help small firms benefit from the skills of graduates
- the expansion of the Innovation and Technology Counselling Service assisting some 3–4,000 firms
- the implementation of the Know-How initiative designed to help small and medium sized firms tap into the expertise of Welsh academic institutions.

In addition a new business-led Management Board—Business Connect Wales Ltd.—was established on 30 March to improve co-ordination of business support in Wales and to improve the operation of the Business Connect information, advice and support service.

Following the transfer of functions, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Lobbyists

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a list, including names and dates, of all meetings that (a) he, (b) his officials, (c) his advisers and (d) his PPS have held during (i) 1997, (ii) 1998 and (iii) 1999 with people who work for political lobbying firms or for businesses that are members of the Public Relations Consultants Association. [79638]

Mr. Michael: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Lewes (Mr. Baker) by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 9 March 1999, Official Report, column 168. When a PPS attends a meeting in an official or semi-official capacity he or she has to do so in accordance with the requirements of the Ministerial Code.

Euro Task Force

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects the Euro Task Force for Wales to complete its work. [80085]

Mr. Michael: It is expected that the Task Force will complete its current role within the next six to nine months.

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales from whom he sought advice on the appointment of the members of the Euro Task Force for Wales. [80083]

Mr. Michael: Advice on appointing the chairman and members of the Task Force was sought from a variety of organisations and individuals including the CBI and European Advisor to the Secretary of State for Wales.

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales from what budget the salary of Mr. J. Casterton, the Manager of the Euro Task Force for Wales, is paid. [80082]

Mr. Michael: Barclays Bank is paying the salary costs of Mr. John Casterton for the entire period of his secondment as Manager of the Euro Task Force for Wales.

EU Structural Funds

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement about the eligibility for Objective 2 and Objective 3 funding for Wales following the Berlin European Summit. [80235]

Mr. Hain: The agreements reached by Member States at the Berlin Summit provided an important step towards agreeing the whole Agenda 2000 package, including the new Structural Funds regulations. They represent a considerable success for the UK Government and its European partners after many months of hard negotiating. The agreements leave it open for the European Parliament to consider the whole package before the end of May.

Although the regulations are still in draft form the Government are eager to make progress in the designation of Objective 2 areas and is currently consulting across the UK on criteria to be adopted for their identification. Eligibility under the Community criteria can be for any type of area, industrial or service based, rural, urban or fisheries. The Regulations specify that 50 per cent. of the Objective 2 population should cover industrial or rural areas where these meet the relevant Community criteria.

All parts of the UK not receiving Objective 1 status will be eligible for Objective 3 funding.

Community Health Councils

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations have taken place on the membership of, and appointments to, community health councils in Wales. [79884]

Mr. Michael: Members of the Community Health Councils (CHCs) whose terms of appointment were due to expire on 31 March 1999 have had their terms extended for one year in advance of the transfer of powers as this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly from 1 July. I announced proposals to develop a new and reinvigorated model of federated Community Health Councils on 15 March with a network of 28 Councils across Wales based on federations linked mainly to local authority areas.

I intend to meet representatives of CHCs to discuss the implementation of these proposals.

Complementary Medical Services

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his policy on complementary medical services. [80840]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: The Government recognise that some people with conditions that do not respond to orthodox treatment can be helped by forms of complementary and alternative medicine and has sponsored research into the use of complementary medicine in general practice. GPs and hospital doctors may arrange for their patients to receive any of the complementary medicine treatments if they feel it is clinically necessary, and is the most appropriate method of treating the particular health need. The doctor should also take into account the patient's wishes, evidence of the safety and effectiveness of the treatment and its cost and availability locally.

Following the transfer of functions, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Job Creation

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the number of new jobs created since 1 May 1997; and if he will make a statement. [80846]

Mr. Hain: Seasonally adjusted figures show that between March 1997 and December 1998 the number of employee jobs in Wales increased by 24,000 to 1,005,000.

Free Bus Travel

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales under what provision the National Assembly is given the power to introduce free bus travel for pensioners. [80511]

Mr. Michael: Following the transfer of powers, the National Assembly will be responsible for overseeing the administration of concessionary fares schemes operated by local authorities under the provisions of Part V of the Transport Act 1985. The nature of the schemes is at present a matter for local authority discretion, although the Government are committed to the introduction of legislation to set a minimum standard for pensioners travelling on buses. In the meantime, the Welsh Office has worked closely with local authorities and I have ensured that all authorities in Wales are in a position to operate schemes for pensioners which at least meet a minimum standard of a £5 bus pass entitling the holder to travel at half-fare. We are now working with local authorities and bus operators to prepare the way for the Welsh Assembly to support the introduction of free bus travel for pensioners over the next two to three years.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion of the funding for the scheme to provide free bus travel for pensioners will come from local authority funds. [80512]

Mr. Hain: At present it is for local authorities to make financial provision for their concessionary fares schemes from the resources available to them. I am currently consulting local authorities and bus operators on how best to implement free bus travel for pensioners, which I expect to see over the next two to three years. The method of funding the additional costs will be a matter for the National Assembly to determine.

Following the transfer of functions, the National Assembly will be responsible for overseeing the administration of concessionary fares schemes by local authorities.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what role the National Assembly will have in the operation of a scheme to provide free bus travel for pensioners. [80513]

Mr. Michael: Following the transfer of functions, the National Assembly will be responsible for overseeing the administration of concessionary fares schemes by local authorities in Wales.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Ministerial Meetings (US)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many times ministers in his Department met their counterparts in the US Administration between 1 January 1998 and 1 June 1998, indicating the dates and locations of each meeting, the ministers involved and the name of the US counterpart. [81081]

Mr. Wilson: I refer the hon. Member to the first sentence of the answer my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State gave to his question, on 26 February 1999, Official Report, column 467. In the period 1 January 1998 to 1 June 1998, these included the meeting between the then-President of the Board of Trade and Charlene Barshefsky, US Trade Representative, at the EU/US Summit in Birmingham on 18 May.

Libya

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to promote exports to and trade with Libya. [80806]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 16 April 1999]: Following the end of UNSC sanctions, I am considering a range of support for UK companies wishing to trade with Libya. Our response to the end of sanctions will be a positive one.

There remain issues to be resolved, including those arising from the WPC Fletcher case. We hope that these can be resolved successfully, so that we can move further towards restoring full diplomatic relations.

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the benefits to British manufacturers of the ending of sanctions against Libya; and if he will make a statement. [80805]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 16 April 1999]: I believe there will be considerable commercial benefits to both Libya and the UK arising from the ending of UNSC sanctions. Libya has long been a traditional trading and investment partner of the UK in the Middle East. It is my hope that our long commercial history will give a sound foundation from which to re-build that relationship and restore Libya as one of our principle trading partners in the Middle East.

I also welcome the fact that many Libyans continue to look to the UK for education and training opportunities.

There is no doubt that Libya's economy is a large, diverse and sophisticated one which will offer many opportunities for the UK across a range of sectors.

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will establish a one-stop-shop to provide information, advice and support to British companies wishing to trade with Libya. [80804]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 16 April 1999]: The Department's trade desk for Libya will provide advice and support for British companies. Its contact details are:

Correspondence

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the hon. Member for West Derbyshire can expect a reply to his letter of 30 January and reminder of 9 March concerning the East Midlands Electricity Consumers' Council. [81444]

Mr. Battle: The correspondence to which the hon. Member refers was, of course, given full consideration as part of the Department's consultation on consumer councils for the utilities, along with many other submissions on this subject. As a matter of courtesy, following the recent publication of our response to the consultation, 14 April 1999, Official Report, columns 263–67, I am writing to the hon. Member in full explaining the situation.

US Trade Sanctions

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will estimate the total cost to United Kingdom businesses of lost exports as a result of the imposition of trade sanctions on British products by the Government of the United States of America. [79186]

Mr. Wilson: US Customs are currently withholding liquidation on some $500m-worth of EU export goods. The United States is likely to be given World Trade Organisation authority on 19 April to retaliate against $191.4m-worth of EU goods. The sectors that are expected to be included in this authorised retaliation, and the annual value of UK exports is as follows.

£ million

US tariff code	Description	US imports from UK 1997
	Total	26.8
85072080	Batteries	13.78
33073050	Bath Oils	7.29
49119120	Lithographs	2.20
63022190	Bed linen	1.48
48192000	Cartons	1.42
85167100	Coffee makers	0.37

It is difficult to say what the actual impact on the targeted sectors will be, as much will depend on how long any retaliatory measures remain in place, what steps were taken to bring forward orders from the US, and the ability of affected companies to find alternative customers for their goods. Some limited damage will have been caused to sectors which were on but have now been removed from the retaliatory list, due to the uncertainty caused in recent months. However, we believe that the Government's prompt response in offering a bond and duty guarantee scheme for the cashmere knitwear industry pre-empted the serious risk of severe and lasting damage being done to that industry.

Jane Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he plans to announce measures to assist (a) the fine print industry and (b) other industries in respect of action taken by the US Government as a result of the banana dispute. [80023]

Mr. Wilson: The removal of some sectors from the US retaliation list on 9 April was welcome, but other sectors remain targeted, including lithographs. The Government brought forward a bond guarantee scheme in respect of cashmere knitwear in response to the particular circumstances of that industry, especially its highly seasonal nature. The need for the scheme has now been removed, and we have no plans to put in place something similar for other industries on the US list.

We now need urgent consultations with all the parties involved in the dispute on the options for reforming the banana regime, and on a solution that would avoid US retaliation taking effect.

European Scrutiny Committee

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on how many occasions since 1 May 1997 his Department has made available to the European Scrutiny Committee (1) Council working documents; [80547]

(2) unofficial texts of draft European legislation. [80550]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 13 April 1999]: The Department receives a large volume of both official and unofficial/working texts during the course of negotiations on EU legislation. In order to facilitate the work of the European Scrutiny Committee and keep it informed of the progress of negotiations, the Department regularly submits Explanatory Memoranda to the Committee. It would involve disproportionate cost to provide a definitive list of the unofficial/working documents made available to the Committee since 1 May.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

European Council

14. Dr. Stoate: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Berlin European Council. [79958]

Mr. Robin Cook: At Berlin, we won a good deal for Britain.

For the first time, spending on the existing member states has been brought under strict control, with a lower ceiling for spending in the existing member states in 2006 than in 2000.

On agriculture, price cuts were agreed to bring milk, cereals and beef prices closer to world prices. A British family of four will benefit by £65 a year.

We won a good deal for UK regions.

The proportion of the UK living in regions covered by Objective 1 will increase by two-thirds and include for the first time Cornwall, West Wales & the Valleys and South Yorkshire.

And we have preserved the British abatement.

Kosovo

15. Dr. Palmer: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the situation in Kosovo. [79959]

Mr. Robin Cook: I discussed developments in Kosovo with European counterparts at a Special General Affairs Council on 8 April. I am in regular contact with them, given the very grave nature of the situation in Kosovo.

Kosovo was also the main topic of discussion amongst EU Heads of Government at the European Council on 14 April.

28. Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Foreign Minister of Russia regarding the situation in Kosovo. [79974]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has been in regular contact with the Foreign Minister of Russia, Mr. Ivanov. He last spoke to him on 15 April.

35. Ms Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next plans to meet European counterparts to discuss developments in Kosovo. [79981]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given earlier today by my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary to my hon. Friend the Member for Bethnal Green and Bow (Ms King), Official Report, column 679.

Armenian Genocide

18. Jane Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans the Government have to make a statement on the Armenian genocide. [79964]

Ms Quin: The British Government condemned the massacres of Armenians in Eastern Anatolia in 1915–16 at the time, and views the sufferings of the Armenian people then as a tragedy of historic proportions. But the British Government have not recognised the events of 1915–16 as a "genocide" a term which did not exist at the time and has no plans to make a statement.

European National Parliaments

22. Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what new steps he is taking to improve communication between the national parliaments of Europe. [79968]

Ms Quin: The Government strongly support improvements in communication between the national parliaments of Europe and between Westminster and the European Parliament.

In particular, the Government have recently extended the scheme which enables MPs to visit EU institutions so that it now includes visits to national parliaments of EU Member States. Such visits will complement the step change initiative which the Government have instigated in relations with our European partners.

In addition, our European embassies regularly advise and make arrangements for UK parliamentarians and Select Committees who wish to make contact with national parliamentarians across Europe.

The entry into force of the Amsterdam Treaty, with the Protocol on National Parliaments, on 1 May will further enhance the role of national parliaments in the EU.

Closer links between national parliaments improve knowledge and awareness of European issues in Westminster and enable Westminster's views to be heard more clearly across Europe.

Pakistan

24. Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on UK relations with Pakistan. [79970]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The United Kingdom relations with Pakistan are long-standing and friendly. We have a continuing dialogue on a variety of issues of mutual concern.

Agenda 2000

25. Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the negotiations on Agenda 2000 relating to enlargement. [79971]

Ms Quin: The settlement reached at Berlin on Agenda 2000 provides for the costs of enlargement to be met within the existing 1.27 per cent. GNP Own Resources ceiling. It therefore paves the way for enlargement. Substantial funds will be available to help prepare applicant counties for accession and to provide assistance after they join—£14.6 million (21.8 million euro) and £38.7 million (58.1 million euro) respectively over the next financing period 2000–06.

Colombia

26. Mr. Goggins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Colombian Government with regard to displaced people. [79972]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The British Government take every opportunity to raise the issue of displaced people, and human rights in general, with the Colombian Government at senior level. I have raised these issues on both of my visits to Colombia and regularly raise them with the Colombian Ambassador in London.

Middle East Peace Process

27. Mr. Trickett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the action proposed to be taken by the European Union as a result of the declaration on the middle east peace process at the Berlin European Council. [79973]

29. Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the role of the EU in assisting a negotiated settlement in the middle east. [79975]

33. Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the declaration on the middle east peace process at the Berlin summit. [79979]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I refer my hon. Friends to the answer given earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Keighley (Mrs. Cryer), Official Report, column 690.

Iraq

30. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs pursuant to his oral answer of 16 March 1999, Official Report, columns 869–70, on Iraq, if he will define the humanitarian objectives of the no-fly zones. [79976]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: As my hon. Friend the Member for Linlithgow is aware from the answer given to his question on 18 March 1999, Official Report, column 764, by the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, my right hon. Friend the Member for Leeds, Central (Mr. Fatchett), the No-Fly Zones were established in response to a situation of overwhelming humanitarian necessity. Coalition aircraft patrol the No-Fly Zones in support of SCR 688 which called on Iraq to end the repression of its civilian population. The humanitarian objective is therefore to limit this repression as far as possible. This remains a vital task, as the latest report from the UN Special Rapporteur on Human Rights makes clear, the Iraqi security services continue to persecute opponents of the regime on the ground. Without our continued presence in the No-Fly Zones, they would be free to do so from the air as well. With past atrocities committed by Iraqi forces in mind, including the chemical weapons attack on the Kurds in Halabjah, we are not prepared to countenance that.

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the sanctions imposed by the international community on Iraq have affected the supply of radioactive isotopes for the treatment of cancer there. [80161]

Mr. Fatchett: We are not aware that sanctions have affected the supply of radioactive isotopes for the treatment of cancer in Iraq. Radioactive isotopes are included on the distribution plan for the present phase of the UN "oil for food" programme. We are not aware that any contracts for these isotopes have been put on hold or blocked in the UN Sanctions Committee.

European Commission

31. Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the disciplinary procedures applicable to employees of the European Commission. [79977]

Ms Quin: I believe that a review of these procedures for disciplinary offences should form part of the Commission reform process. Effective arrangements must be put in place under which those who do not meet the standard required of European public servants can be disciplined and, if necessary, dismissed within a reasonable timescale.

European Union

32. Ms Kelly: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with his European counterparts about institutional reform of the European Union. [79978]

Ms Quin: Heads of Government met Mr. Prodi, the European Council's nominee for Commission President, on 14 April to discuss Commission reform. They agreed to take forward the reform process at the European Council in Cologne on 3–4 June on the basis of more detailed plans drawn up by Mr. Prodi.

The timing of an Intergovernmental Conference to examine institutional reform prior to enlargement will be considered at the Cologne summit.

The Government are pushing for profound reform of the way in which the Commission works. We believe that the Commission should be guided by the principles of efficiency, transparency and accountability. Achieving this will require changes in financial control systems, personnel management and structures.

Nigeria

34. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's relations with the new Government in Nigeria. [79980]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We are working to build a strong relationship with President-elect General Olusegun Obasanjo, who will be sworn in to office on 29 May 1999.

My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary met him in Nigeria shortly after the February Presidential elections. General Obasanjo subsequently visited London and had a meeting with my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister, which I attended. He also met my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence.

BBC World Service

36. Mr. Sutcliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the funding of the BBC World Service during (a) 1999–2000, (b) 2000–01 and (c) 2001–02. [79982]

Ms Quin: Following the outcome of the Comprehensive Spending Review in July 1998, grant-in-aid to the BBC World Service was increased by £44.2 million to £175.5 million in 1999–2000, £174.0 million in 2000–01 and £177.7 million in 2001–02, a real increase of on average nearly 3.9 per cent. in each year above the 1998–99 level. This compares with a CSR increase for the FCO of around 2 per cent. per annum.

International Criminal Court

37. Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on progress with the establishment of an international criminal court. [79983]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Eighty one States, including the UK, have signed the Statute of the International Criminal Court and two have ratified it. The first meeting of the Preparatory Commission for the Court took place in February; the next will begin on 26 July. The Government continue to lobby for international support for the Court, and are playing a full part in the work of the Preparatory Commission.

Corpus Juris

Mr. Sawford: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had on corpus juris and if he will make a statement. [79951]

Kate Hoey: I have been asked to reply.

The research study entitled "Corpus Juris", published in 1997 under the aegis of the European Commission, contains proposals for common penal rules and procedures to protect the financial interests of the European Community, including the creation of an office of European Public Prosecutor.

The House of Lords European Communities Committee has recently conducted an inquiry into the Corpus Juris report. The Government provided both written and oral evidence to the inquiry and are awaiting the Committee's findings.

Although the Government fully share the objective of fighting fraud against the Community budget, we disagree with many of the recommendations of the "Corpus Juris" study. None of the recommendations have been submitted to the Council of Ministers, but if this were to happen, unanimous agreement would be needed for them to be adopted and come into effect. The Government's agreement to the majority of the proposals in their present form is highly unlikely.

Macpherson Inquiry

Mr. Efford: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the implications for his Department of the Macpherson Inquiry recommendations; and if he will make a statement. [80523]

Mr. Fatchett: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply to his question given by the Minister for the Cabinet Office on 14 April 1999, Official Report, column 239.

Ambassadors for British Business

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the criteria for selection of Ambassadors for British business. [81038]

Mr. Fatchett: The Ambassadors for British Business were selected to represent a wide cross-section of British commercial success. They are people who frequently go abroad on working visits and have a wealth of specialist knowledge backed up by the excellent contracts. They include the chairmen and executives of multinationals as well as smaller concerns. They have been very successful in helping to promote the United Kingdom as a place to do business.

Papua New Guinea

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 22 March 1999, Official Report, column 61, on Papua New Guinea, what issues were discussed with the High Commissioner at the meeting of 3 March; what actions were requested of Her Majesty's Government; and what commitments were made on behalf of Her Majesty's Government. [80878]

Mr. Fatchett: On 3 March, the Papua New Guinea High Commissioner telephoned officials at FCO. In line with Government practice, I cannot reveal the substance of an exchange conducted in confidence with a representative of a foreign government.

Chagos Islands

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to allow the Chagos islanders to visit their homeland; and if he will make a statement. [80803]

Mr. Fatchett [holding answer 16 April 1999]: Any person who wishes to visit the Chagos islands can apply for a permit to do so and each application will be considered on its merits.

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the demand of the Chagos islanders to return to their homeland following the recent High Court ruling on this matter; and if he will make a statement. [80802]

Mr. Fatchett [holding answer 16 April 1999]: The recent High Court ruling concerned an application for leave to apply for a Judicial Review. Leave was granted and in due course the case will be heard by the full Divisional Court. In the meantime, it will be inappropriate for the Government to comment further.

Libya

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Libyan Arab Jamahirya regarding the re-opening of a Libyan diplomatic mission in London; and if he will make a statement. [80809]

Mr. Fatchett [holding answer 16 April 1999]: The re-opening of a Libyan diplomatic mission in London depends on the re-establishment of diplomatic relations which were broken off in 1984 after the shooting of WPC Fletcher outside the Libyan People's Bureau in London.

Following the handover of the two Lockerbie accused, there remain a number of other bilateral issues between Libya and ourselves. Foremost of these is the WPC Fletcher case.

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he intends (a) to re-open the British Embassy in Tripoli and (b) to re-establish full diplomatic relations with Libya; and if he will make a statement. [80807]

Mr. Fatchett [holding answer 16 April 1999]: The re-opening of the British Embassy in Tripoli depends on the re-establishment of diplomatic relations which were broken off in 1984 after the shooting of WPC Fletcher outside the Libyan People's Bureau in London.

Following the handover of the two Lockerbie accused, there remain a number of other bilateral issues between Libya and ourselves. Foremost of these is the WPC Fletcher case.

Mr. Alan Johnson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps have been taken by the UK and the EU to implement the suspension of UN sanctions against Libya; and if he will make a statement. [81677]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: UN sanctions against Libya imposed by Security Council resolutions 748 and 883 were suspended on 5 April, in accordance with UN Security Council resolution 1192 (1998), immediately the UN Secretary-General reported that the two Lockerbie accused had been delivered for trial before the Scottish court established in the Netherlands and that the Libyan Government had satisfied the French judicial authorities with regard to the bombing of UTA 772. The prohibition on payment of performance bonds in paragraph 8 of resolution 883 remains in operation.

The provisions of those resolutions were implemented in the UK by restrictions imposed in the Libya (United Nations Prohibition of Flights) Order 1992, The Libya (United Nations Sanctions) Order 1993, The Libya (United Nations Sanctions)(Channel Islands) Order 1993 and The Libya (United Nations Sanctions)(Isle of Man) Order 1993. In accordance with Article 1(2) of each Order its operation was accordingly suspended; Article 13 of the three 1993 Orders, which imposes restrictions on the payment of bonds given in respect of contracts whose performance had been affected by the suspended provisions of the Orders, and the provisions in those Orders relating to the enforcement of Article 13, remain in operation. Details of the suspension of UN sanctions and of the Orders have been published in a notice in the London Gazette on 12 April and the Edinburgh and Belfast Gazettes on 9 April. Action is in hand to gazette the suspension of the relevant provisions of the Orders implementing the UN sanctions in the Overseas Territories.

On 16 April, The Council of the EU adopted a Common Position (7318/99) suspending the measures taken against Libya by the EU in response to UN Security Council resolutions 748 and 883.

The Common Position also specified that the measures agreed by Member States in 1986 in response to Libya's general implication in terrorism should remain in force (these measures are an arms embargo; restrictions on the freedom of movement of Libyan diplomats and consular personnel; reduction of the staff of diplomatic and consular missions; and stricter visa requirements and procedures). The Common Position will be reviewed in the light of the UN Secretary-General's report on Libyan compliance with the remaining provisions of UN Security Council resolutions 731 and 748, in particular Libyan renunciation of terrorism.

The Common Position does not affect Regulation 3275/93 which prohibits the satisfying of claims with regard to contracts and transactions the performance of which was affected by UN sanctions.

Based on this Common Position, the EC adopted a Regulation suspending the application of Regulation 3274/93 which prevented the supply of certain goods and services to Libya.

In addition to the EU measures against Libya agreed in 1986, national controls on the supply of aircraft, aircraft parts and flight simulators to Libya under the provisions of Dual-Use and Related Goods (Export Control) Regulation 1996, as amended, remain in force.

The Foreign and Commonwealth Office will be issuing a press release on the suspension of EU sanctions against Libya.

Inward Investment

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the work he has done to secure (a) Japanese and (b) Korean inward investment into the United Kingdom. [81104]

Mr. Fatchett [holding answer 16 April 1999]: The Invest in Britain Bureau (IBB) is jointly managed by the FCO and DTI. It has active promotion strategies aimed at securing the UK's position as the number one European location for Japanese and Korean investment. The IBB runs a programme of company visits (900 in Japan, 220 in Korea in 1998–99), promotional seminars, media campaigns and inward missions aimed at attracting inward investment, as well as working closely with existing investors alongside the UK Development Agencies.

The Ministerial teams in the FCO and DTI support this both here in the UK and when travelling overseas. For example, I have met a number of Japanese and Korean investors here and when visiting Japan and Korea.

Prime Minister (Foreign Media Articles)

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what correspondence his (a) Department and (b) office have received from (i) posts abroad and (ii) the Prime Minister's office on placement of articles written by the Prime Minister in the foreign media, which would facilitate identification of those articles; and if he will make a statement. [81237]

Mr. Fatchett: We do not maintain the records necessary to provide a comprehensive answer. To do so would be possible only at disproportionate cost.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Departmental Staff (Ethnic Origin)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will provide a breakdown, in numerical and percentage terms, of the ethnic origin, at 1 March, of (a) his private office, (b) Government special advisers, (c) his Policy Unit and (d) staff in total. [78513]

Mr. Nick Brown: (a) The composition of my Private Office on 1 March was as follows:

	Number	Percentage
White Origin	5	71.4
Ethnic minority origin	2	28.6

The figures quoted relate solely to my Private Office and do not cover the whole of the Secretariat in my Department.

(b) I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office on 22 February 1999, Official Report, column 39.

(c) My Department does not have a separate Policy Unit.

(d) I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office on 31 March 1999, Official Report, columns 710–11.

New Forest (Hunting)

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many videos his Department has received since 1 May 1997 depicting the activities of the New Forest hounds; and which Ministers have viewed them. [80435]

Mr. Morley: Since 1 May 1997, the Forestry Commission has received about a dozen videos of activities during fox hunts in the New Forest. I have seen some of these videos.

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for what reasons it took from 1 June 1998, when the Forestry Commission approved a licence for New Forest fox hounds, until October 1998 for that licence to be issued. [80436]

Mr. Morley: The Forestry Commission issues licences for fox hunting over its land. The terms of those licences are based on an Agreement between the Commission and the Master of Foxhounds Association. The Agreement for last season was concluded on 18 August, after which the licences and associated maps were prepared in accordance with the Agreement. The Commission completed the New Forest Fox Hounds' licence on 24 September.

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what involvement Ministers have in the procedure by which the Forestry Commission issue hunting licences in the New Forest; [80433]

(2) what involvement Ministers have in the process of issuing a hunting licence once the Forestry Commission have approved the terms of such a licence. [80434]

Mr. Morley: None. The Forestry Commission does, however, keep Ministers informed about its policies on hunting and the terms of the licences that it issues.

Advisory Committees

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list those members of advisory committees to his Department who have declared outside interests with (a) DiaDexus, (b) Cerebrus Ltd, (c) Cerebrus PLC, (d) Stanford University, (e) Human Genome Services Inc, (f) Glaxo Wellcome, (g) the Wellcome Institute, (h) Monsanto, (i) AgrEvo and (j) SmithKline Beecham. [80129]

Mr. Morley: The following members of advisory committees have declared relevant outside interests as listed below:

Advisory Committee	Member	Declared interest
Veterinary Products Committee	Mr. J. M. Jepson	Glaxo Wellcome, SmithKline Beecham
	Dr. D. F. Wishart	SmithKline Beecham
Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee	Dr. Peter Goodfellow	SmithKline Beecham
	Prof. Roy Anderson	The Wellcome Trust
	Prof. John Collinge	The Wellcome Trust
Farm Animal Welfare Council	Dr. Agnes Winter	Glaxo Wellcome

Declared interest is in Wellcome Trust—not Wellcome Institute.

Set-aside Land

Mr. Cox: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the total payment for land put into set-aside in England and Wales in 1998. [80905]

Mr. Rooker: At 31 March, £75,589,275 had been paid on land set aside in 1998 under the Arable Area Payments Scheme in England and Wales.

Genetically Modified Food

Ms Drown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what assessment he has made of the safety of the antibiotic-resistant gene in Novartis's genetically modified maize; [80794]

(2) what assessment the Advisory Committee on Novel Foods and Processes made of the safety of the antibiotic-resistant gene in Novartis's genetically modified food. [80793]

Mr. Rooker: The conclusions of the Advisory Committee on Novel Food and Processes (ACNFP) concerning this GM maize are recorded in the Committee's 1996 annual report which is available in the House of Commons Library. The ACNFP was satisfied that processed food ingredients derived from the maize were as safe as their conventional counterparts but expressed reservations about the use of the unprocessed maize as an animal feedingstuff because of what it considered to be a small, but finite, chance that this could lead to a transfer of antibiotic resistance.

Subsequent to the ACNFP's consideration of this matter, this maize was assessed by three EC Scientific Committees, the Scientific Committee for Foods, the Scientific Committee for Plants and the Scientific Committee on Animal Nutrition, who took into account the ACNFP's views. Whilst agreeing with the ACNFP's assessment that there was a finite risk of the transfer of antibiotic resistance to cattle fed on the raw maize, all three EC Committees felt that this was too small to warrant recommending a ban on its use for animal feed. EC approval was therefore granted. The Department has however commissioned some research work at the University of Leeds to look further into the issue of the potential for the transference of antibiotic resistance from GM crops. Should any scientific evidence emerge from this which in the opinion of the ACNFP shows the risk to be greater than originally thought, the Government will consider taking action under the safeguard clause in the EC Deliberate Release Directive (90/220) to restrict the use of the raw maize in animal feed and press for an urgent reappraisal of the situation by the EC Scientific Committees and the Council.

Synthetic Pyrethroids

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what studies he has carried out to determine the period which elapses before a river or stream's insect life recovers to its former levels after pollution by synthetic pyrethroids. [80875]

Mr. Rooker: All veterinary medicines and pesticides, including those containing synthetic pyrethroids, must satisfy statutory criteria including safety. The safety assessment includes safety to the environment. Pollution incidents should not occur if safety warnings on labels are heeded. The period of recovery after a pollution incident is a matter for the environment agencies but is likely to vary according to the conditions in the river or stream concerned.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the result of studies he has carried out into the effect of synthetic pyrethroids in (a) sheep dips and (b) sprays for plants on (1) aquatic insects, (2) soil invertebrates and (3) other animal life; what sums he has expended in each of the last five years on such studies; and what further work is being carried out to determine the effect on fish life in affected rivers and streams. [80874]

Mr. Rooker: No veterinary medicine is authorised unless it satisfies statutory criteria of safety, quality and efficacy. Safety includes safety to the environment. As part of the process of approval, the applicant company is required to submit data to the Veterinary Medicines Directorate where they are carefully assessed by specialists qualified in various scientific disciplines including ecotoxicology. No studies are carried out by the Ministry.

All pesticides are similarly subject to strict statutory control. In considering the approval or review of a pesticide, an assessment is made (on the basis of data supplied by the applicant) of the risk to people, wildlife and to the wider environment. Only if this assessment shows that there is no unacceptable risk will approval be granted or allowed to continue following a review. The Ministry has carried out no studies of the kind specified into the environmental effects of synthetic pyrethroid pesticides. However, synthetic pyrethroid pesticides have been used in other MAFF funded research.

Seals

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the quantities of fish eaten by seals in the waters of the United Kingdom annually. [80871]

Mr. Morley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him on 17 November 1998, Official Report, column 574.

Public Appointments

Mr. Brady: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the public appointments for which his Department is responsible and which carry a fee or salary, indicating for each type of appointment the fee or salary band which applies. [80759]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 15 April 1999]: "Public Bodies 1998"—copies of which are available in the Library of the House—provides information on the levels of remuneration paid to those serving on the boards of public bodies for which my Department is responsible. Some public appointments, however, are unpaid as many of those who accept public appointment do so on a voluntary basis.

Fisheries Agreements

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in which African countries, other than Mauritania, British fishing vessels, British flagged fishing vessels and British registered companies have fisheries interests. [81086]

Mr. Morley: There are no UK vessels currently fishing in the waters of African countries.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which (a) British fishing vessels, (b) British flagged fishing vessels and (c) British registered companies have a beneficial interest in the fisheries agreement with Mauritania. [81085]

Mr. Morley: There are no UK vessels currently fishing in Mauritanian waters under the EU fisheries agreement.

Sand Eels

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what studies his Department has carried out to determine the importance of sand eels as the prey of (a) salmon smelts and (b) sea trout smelts; and what was the conclusion of such studies. [80876]

Mr. Morley: No such studies have been carried out by the Department.

Seed Certification

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he plans to grant any more applications for provisional seed certification under the non-statutory seed certification scheme. [81263]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 19 April 1999]: A number of applications in England and Wales for provisional seed certification under the non-statutory seed certification scheme are being processed through the current growing season. However, the Government will come forward quickly with proposals to amend secondary seeds legislation before the next round of applications are made. If these measures are adopted, there would be no need for the non-statutory scheme to continue.

Pork Imports

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what advice he has received on the compatibility with Article 36 of the Treaty establishing the European Union of placing restrictions on the import of pork products not produced to UK standards. [81364]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 19 April 1999]: In certain circumstances Article 36 of the Treaty allows the maintenance of restrictions on the free movement of goods where these can be justified for the protection of the health and life of humans or animals or on grounds of public morality or policy. However, it is clear from Rulings by the European Court of Justice that we cannot use Article 36 of the Treaty to impose higher UK standards on imports where EU law has been harmonised as it has been in the field of farm animal welfare. Nor is it relevant to the UK ban on the use of Meat and Bone Meal (MBM) in animal feed as this ban is not in place because there is a known health risk to humans or animals in feeding MBM to pigs or poultry. The jurisprudence of the European Court of Justice also precludes reliance on the grounds of public morality or policy in the circumstances with which the hon. Member is concerned.

Organic Aid Scheme

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the effect on the amount of grant made under the organic aid scheme of recent changes in the definition of unimproved land for the purposes of the scheme. [81272]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 19 April 1999]: The amount of aid granted under the Organic Farming Scheme will be dependent on the number of applications and the type of land involved. We expect demand to be strong.

Rivers (Over-fishing)

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what powers he has to limit the over-fishing of rivers; what discussions he has had with fishing clubs and river authorities about over-fishing of elvers and salmon; and if he will make a statement. [81261]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 19 April 1999]: The Environment Agency, which is responsible for the management of inland fisheries in England and Wales, has powers to make byelaws to regulate fishing for salmon and eels including elvers. It can also make net limitation orders to limit numbers of net licences in salmon net fisheries. Both byelaws and net limitation orders must be confirmed by Ministers.

Following advice from the International Council for the Exploration of the Sea (ICES) that extreme caution should be exercised in the management of multi-sea-winter salmon and that the level of exploitation should be significantly reduced in 1999, the Environment Agency proposed the introduction of byelaws to reduce exploitation of spring salmon by both nets and rods in England and Wales. There was extensive consultation on these proposals including advertising in local and national press. The byelaws were confirmed, with modifications, on 14 April.

The Environment Agency and the Ministry have recently commissioned research into the state of eel and elver stocks and levels of exploitation. In addition, the independent group established by Ministers to review all aspects of salmon and freshwater fisheries legislation is considering whether the additional powers are needed to regulate fishing for salmon and eels. The group is expected to report to Ministers in the autumn.

Free-range Hens

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his Department's definition of free-range hens. [81270]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 19 April 1999]: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to free-range egg production from hens. Before eggs can be marketed as free-range, EU Commission Regulations require, among other things, that the hens have continuous daytime access to open air runs, mainly covered with vegetation. They also specify maximum outdoor and indoor stocking densities.

Goats and Sheep

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to prevent the illegal slaughtering of goats and sheep, involving the removal of hides by oxyacetylene blowtorches; and if he will make a statement. [81394]

Mr. Rooker: The Fresh Meat (Hygiene and Inspection) Regulations 1995 (as amended) which implement the EC Fresh Meat Directive (64/433/EEC as amended) in Great Britain, make it an offence for any person to sell for human consumption fresh meat which has not been produced under veterinary supervision in licensed premises.

The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (MAFF) will investigate any allegations relating to the illegal production of singed sheep and goat carcases, commonly known as 'smokies'. Where there is sufficient evidence that such activity has taken place, and it is in the public interest to do so, MAFF will prosecute those involved, in co-operation with Local Authority Environmental Health Departments as appropriate.

Pesticides

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will require the Advisory Committee on Pesticides to take account of the effects on biodiversity in reaching decisions about the clearance of pesticides. [81449]

Mr. Rooker: The remit of the Advisory Committee on Pesticides is to give advice to Ministers, either when requested to do so or otherwise, on any matters relating to the control of pests in furthering the general purposes of Part III of the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985. These purposes include "the continuous development of means ... to safeguard the environment ...".

The Committee's members include people with expertise in environmental matters.

All pesticides are approved on the basis of a thorough evaluation of the risk that they pose in use. No pesticide may be used unless Ministers, advised by the Committee, have given approval to that use. When considering whether to recommend that a pesticide should be approved by Ministers, the Committee will take into account, amongst other things, the possible effects of that pesticide on non-target wildlife and the environment. If the risk is considered to be too great, then no approval is recommended.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Stakeholder Pensions

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the compatibility of his plan to limit charges for stakeholder pensions with the need for those purchasing such pensions to be given proper advice. [81114]

Mr. Timms: We recognise that proper information and advice for those who need it will be an important part of the decision-making process for individuals considering a stakeholder pension scheme.

Details of the minimum standards for stakeholder pensions are subject to further consultation. The standards will include a limit on the level of charges, and in setting that limit we shall consider carefully what allowance should be made for the costs of information and advice.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the implications of the growing use of tracker pension funds for the economy; and what account he has taken of such an assessment in designing his stakeholder pension scheme. [81113]

Mr. Timms: No such assessment has been made. We expect that stakeholder pension schemes will, like other pension schemes, have the option of investing in tracker funds.

Fraud Investigation

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what has been the result of his Department's investigation into the nature and extent of identity fraud. [81092]

Mr. Timms: The best available measure of the scale of Identity Fraud is provided by the Department's measurement regime (Benefit Reviews). The second Income Support review recorded the level of ID fraud at between 1 per cent. and 9 per cent. of the stock of fraud. This translates to between £17.5 million and £154 million.

Initial characteristics of an Identity Fraudster were identified and further research was proposed to refine these characteristics further. This is a valuable line of inquiry since if the characteristics of an Identity Fraudster can be established, then we can enhance our ability to prevent, detect and target resources at identity fraud.

The Identity Fraud Management Unit has now been incorporated within the Benefits Agency Security and Investigation Service (BASIS), the organised and serious fraud investigation service, who have extensive intelligence and experience in dealing with Identity related benefit crime.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps have been taken towards establishing a criminal intelligence database for fraud investigation in the Benefits Agency and local authorities. [81090]

Mr. Timms: The Benefits Agency Security and Investigation Service (BASIS) uses an intelligence database to record all operational intelligence relating to investigations. BASIS liaises with the Benefit Fraud Investigation Service (BFIS) and local authorities and is developing further its interchange and use of intelligence for investigative purposes with BFIS and local authorities.

Pensioners (Minimum Income)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the number of people who will benefit as a result of the new guaranteed minimum income for pensioners on income support. [80948]

Mr. Timms: The number of pensioner benefit units that will benefit from the Minimum Income Guarantee for pensioners in 1999–2000 is estimated to be 1.47 million. A pensioner benefit unit represents a single person aged 60 or over, or a couple where one or both members is aged 60 or over.

Notes:

1. Figures are rounded to the nearest 10,000 and exclude pensioners in residential care and nursing homes.

2. The estimates are based on forecasts published in the March 1999 Departmental Report.

Macpherson Inquiry

Mr. Efford: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the implications for his Department of the Macpherson Inquiry recommendations; and if he will make a statement. [80522]

Angela Eagle: I refer the hon. Member to the written answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office on 14 April 1999, Official Report, column 23.

Pensioners (Benefits)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what has been the increase in take-up of (a) income support and (b) other benefits among people of pensionable age since 1 May 1997. [80947]

Mr. Timms: The information requested is currently unavailable. Estimates of take-up are published annually for Income Support, Housing Benefit, Council Tax Benefit and Family Credit. The statistics for the year 1997–98 are in the process of being compiled and will be published later this year.

Incapacity Benefit

Ms Jenny Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people were receiving incapacity benefit in (a) the UK and (b) the West Midlands on 31 March. [81162]

Mr. Bayley: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the table. Figures for 31 March 1999 are not yet available.

Incapacity Benefit recipients

	31 August 1998
United Kingdom	1,716,488
(Northern Ireland)	98,588
(Great Britain)	1,617,900
West Midlands	141,680

Both systems exclude a small number of cases held clerically

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Lifelong Learning

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what measures the Government are undertaking to promote lifelong learning and develop the skills base of older workers as a means of improving the levels of employment among the over 50s. [80946]

Mr. Mudie: The Government believe that lifelong learning contributes to national competitiveness, personal prosperity and to the development of a fair and harmonious society. The aim is to develop a "learning society" in which everyone regularly updates their skills and knowledge throughout life. Action to improve learning opportunities for the over 50s is an important part of our approach to "Better Government For Older People".

Measures to promote lifelong learning and develop the skills base of older workers include: extending student loans to those aged 54, opportunities through the £15 million Adult and Community Learning Fund; access to Learning Direct and Career Development Loans; and opportunities through work based learning for adults, the New Deals and Employment Zones. In addition, the New Deal for the over 50s who are out of work for six months or more and are on income replacement benefits, and their dependent partners, announced in the budget, includes plans for a learning support of up to £750 for each person.

New Deal (Disabled People)

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many organisations for disabled people have received New Deal funding. [80890]

Ms Hodge: The information requested is not available in the form requested. However, under the New Deal for Disabled People, 22 of 24 Innovative Schemes involve organisations of or for disabled people. In addition, all the consortium contracted to deliver the second group of six Personal Adviser Service pilot areas also involve such organisations.

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many consortiums led by disabled people received New Deal funding during the second tranche. [80891]

Ms Hodge: Under the New Deal for Disabled People, all six contracts awarded in the second tranche of the Personal Adviser Service and 13 of the 14 contracts awarded under the second tranche Innovative Schemes are two consortiums that include organisations of or for disabled people. Two Personal Adviser consortiums and seven Innovative Schemes are led by voluntary sector organisations.

New Deal (Young People)

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the average length of time spent on the Gateway of the New Deal for 18 to 25-year-olds by those (a) with no educational qualifications, (b) with Foundation Level qualifications, (c) with NVQ Level 1, (d) with NVQ Level 2, (e) with NVQ Level 3, (f) with NVQ Level 4, (g) with other qualifications and (h) who did not list any educational qualifications. [81108]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The information set out in the following table shows the average length of time spent on the New Deal Gateway by qualification level, for those young people who had left the Gateway by the end of January 1999.

Highest qualification held	Average length of time spent on Gateway (in days)
NVQ/SVQ Level 4+ or equivalent	87
NVQ/SVQ Level 3 or equivalent	92
NVQ/SVQ Level 2 or equivalent	91
NVQ/SVQ Level 1 or equivalent	95
NVQ/SVQ Foundation Level or equivalent	98
Other	92
None	100
Those who did not list qualifications	68

Gambling (Young People)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what action his Department is taking to combat gambling by young people; and if he will make a statement. [80907]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Schools have an important role to play in helping to equip young people with the skills and knowledge they will require now and in later life. They are required to provide a curriculum which promotes the spiritual, moral, social, cultural, physical and mental development of pupils and to prepare pupils for the opportunities, responsibilities and experiences of adult life. Schools take these legal responsibilities concerning the curriculum very seriously. Many schools choose to meet them through programmes of personal, social and health education which can encompass a broad range of topics, including the dangers of gambling.

Out-of-school Education

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he has issued revised guidance on the education of children out of school, including pupil referral units, following his consultation. [81191]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The consultation on the draft 'Social Inclusion: Pupil Support' guidance, which covers advice on education out of school including pupil referral units, ended on 31 March. We are now considering the responses and intend to issue the final version before the summer break.

SCOTLAND

Task Forces

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will list for all task forces and policy reviews with external members established by his Department since May 1997 (a) their dates of establishment, (b) those which have issued final reports and their dates of publication, (c) those which have been terminated and their dates of termination and (d) for those bodies still in existence, expected reporting and termination dates; [79281]

(2) if he will list all those task forces and policy reviews with external members established by his Department since May 1997 which have set up (a) sub-groups, (b) working parties and (c) other subsidiary committees. [79258]

One or more sub-groups have been set up

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Direct Labour Organisations

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list by authority and service area the surpluses and deficits recorded in Scottish local authority direct labour or service organisations audited accounts for 1995–96. [81369]

Mr. McLeish: I have arranged for a detailed list, provided by the Accounts Commission for Scotland, of the audited surpluses and deficits achieved by direct labour and direct service organisations of Scottish local authorities in 1995–96 to be placed in the House of Commons Library.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Genetically Modified Salmon

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what estimate he has made of the number of genetically modified salmon presently being farmed; [81448]

(2) how many genetically modified salmon he estimates have escaped from farms into the environment. [81447]

Mr. Macdonald: No genetically modified salmon are currently farmed in Scotland. A three-year land-based trial project was licensed in 1995, but this was terminated early. There were no escapes.

As from 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

HEALTH

South-west Health Authorities (Funding)

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what changes have been made to the way money is allocated to health authorities and NHS trusts in Devon and Cornwall; and on what basis changes were calculated. [74431]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 8 March 1999]: A weighted capitation formula is used to calculate fair share targets of available resources.

Three changes were made to the hospital and community health services formula for 1998–99:

(a) the additional need weightings were applied to 100 per cent. of expenditure;

(b) the number of staff market forces factor payzones was reduced from 61 to 51;

(c) an adjustment was introduced to take the geographical cost variation of providing emergency ambulance services into account.

These changes were carried out under the auspices of the Resource Allocation Group (RAG). RAG published their 1997 report in February 1998.

From 1999–2000, health authorities received unified allocations covering:

(a) hospital and community health services;

(b) general practice infrastructure; and

(c) prescribing.

Three changes were made to the formula for 1999–2000:

(a) the adjustment for age in the hospital and community health services component was updated;

(b) a new additional need adjustment for prescribing was introduced;

(c) a monetary adjustment was introduced for the extra costs of interpretation, advocacy and translation services for ethnic minority populations.

These changes were based on research conducted under the auspices of the Advisory Committee on Resource Allocation, the successor body to RAG. The committee will publish their 1998 annual report shortly.

We do not make revenue allocations direct to National Health Service trusts. NHS trusts receive most of their income through agreements with health authorities and their primary care groups.

Herbal Medicines

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on how many occasions in the last 12 months the Medicines Control Agency has taken action to commence the process of removing from the market products which it accepts as safe but which it considers to be unlicensed herbal medicines requiring a product licence. [79486]

Ms Jowell: The Medicines Control Agency cannot accept that a herbal medicine is definitively safe unless this has been proven through the licensing process. The MCA is bound to ensure, in accordance with the law, the withdrawal of all unlicensed herbal medicines which are not exempt from licensing. In the past 12 months, except for the two occasions when immediate removal on safety grounds has been effected, compliance with the law has been achieved without the need for the MCA to enforce immediate removal of a herbal medicine from the market.

Nurses (Training)

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what funding his Department plans to make available (i) in East Sussex and (ii) nationally to support the training of nurses. [79489]

Mr. Denham: The Sussex Education Consortium, which covers East and west Sussex, plans to spend £16.5 million on the pre and post-registration education and training of nurses, midwives and health visitors in the 1999–2000 financial year. Consortia, nationally, plan to spend £513 million on nursing and midwifery training in 1999–2000.

Viagra

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to make a statement on his policy proposals for the provision of Viagra by the NHS following the completion of his public consultation exercise. [80662]

Mr. Denham: The period of consultation ended on 25 March and work is now under way to collate the responses. We will make an announcement once we have had the opportunity to consider carefully all comments received during the consultation period.

Cardiac Surgery (North Staffordshire)

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the (a) average waiting time and (b) number of patients on the waiting list for cardiac surgery at the North Staffordshire hospital. [80585]

Mr. Denham: On 31 December 1998, there were 411 patients waiting for cardiothoracic surgery at North Staffordshire Hospital National Health Service Trust, and they had been waiting for an average of 5.95 months. All urgent patients are currently being treated within four months.

Biggleswade and Steppingley Hospitals

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the projected expenditure in mid-Bedfordshire for 1998–99 on care for the elderly in Biggleswade and Steppingley hospitals; and what is the projected cost per head. [80478]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is not available centrally.

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will make a statement on the retention and expansion of existing services and the development of new services, by the three relevant primary care groups, in relation to Biggleswade and Steppingley hospitals; [80457]

(2) if he will provide a breakdown of costs in relation to the services currently provided at Biggleswade and Steppingley Hospitals; [80490]

(3) what assessment he has made of the financial impact on (a) Bedford Hospital and (b) other local acute hospitals of the (i) maintenance and (ii) development of services at Biggleswade and Steppingley Hospitals; [80447]

(4) what assessment he has made of the consultation process on the review of Biggleswade and Steppingley Hospitals; [80446]

(5) if he will assess the views of (a) general practitioners, (b) consultants and (c) other healthcare professionals towards the retention and development of continuing care facilities at Biggleswade and Steppingley hospitals; [80475]

(6) if he will conduct (a) an audit of current provision of care and (b) a health needs assessment in relation to the review of Biggleswade and Steppingley Hospitals; [80491]

(7) what estimate he has made of the projected income which would result from the sale of the Biggleswade and Steppingley Hospital sites; [80489]

(8) if he will make a statement on progress in the review of acute care in Bedfordshire and the extent to which it informs the review of intermediate care; [80474]

(9) what assessment he has made of the Option 9 proposals for Biggleswade and Steppingley hospitals in relation to the Government's (a) medium and (b) long-term plans for developing the NHS; [80480]

(10) what assessment he has made of the basis for Bedford Hospital NHS Trust's support for the withdrawal of services from Biggleswade and Steppingley Hospitals; [80483]

(11) what assessment he has made of the prospects for using the Biggleswade and Steppingley hospital sites as part of the healthy living centre programme. [80461]

Mr. Denham: It is the responsibility of health authorities and primary care groups to assess the health care needs of their population, to draw up strategies and commissioning plans and to secure a range of hospital and community health services to meet those needs.

I understand that the health authority has conducted a consultation exercise into the development of intermediate care services. However, I understand that no proposals for change have yet been made. If proposals for significant change are made, and if the Community Health Council contests the health authority's proposals, following consultation, the matter would be referred to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for a decision. We would consider all the views expressed during the consultation prior to making any decision.

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for what reasons Bedfordshire Health Authority has employed a consultant in connection with the review of Biggleswade and Steppingley hospitals. [80459]

Mr. Denham: It is a matter for Bedfordshire Health Authority to decide whether or not it requires the use of consultancy services. I understand that consultancy services were used to carry out the third phase of the review process.

Medical Negligence

Jacqui Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many medical negligence claims have (i) been brought and (ii) been successful against NHS practitioners in each of the last five years. [80648]

Mr. Denham: The information is not available in the format requested.

Neurological Conditions

Audrey Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the impact of the National Performance Framework on access to services for patients with neurological conditions. [80594]

Mr. Denham: A revised copy of the National Health Service Performance Assessment Framework document, reflecting comments received, was published on 8 April 1999. The associated high level performance indicator set is expected to be published later in the year alongside the Clinical Indicators. It is likely that a refined version of the "Discharge home within 56 days of emergency admission from home with a stroke" indicator will appear in both the amended set of Clinical Indicators and the high level performance indicators supporting the Performance Assessment Framework.

The high level performance indicators will continue to develop over time to ensure they focus on the outcomes that matter most to the patients and the public.

British Child Migrants

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects the Support Fund for the Former British Child Migrants to become operational; how the fund will be administered; what conditions will apply to determine who will be eligible to receive funding; and when the central information index and website will become operational. [81074]

Mr. Hutton: The Child Migrant Support Fund became operational from 1 April 1999. It is administered by International Social Service (ISS) on behalf of the Department. Applications to the Fund must be made through the relevant national ISS office, which will process the claims, but decisions on applications will be made by ISS United Kingdom.

In order to receive assistance from the Fund, the applicant must be able to show that he/she is a former British child migrant who does not have the means to fund his/her own arrangements for a first-time reunion with a close family member (mother, father, parents' siblings, or their own brothers and sisters).

The central information Index is expected to become operational in the autumn. The website has been operational since 1 March 1999.

Hospital Meals

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on his policy on charging patients for their meals (a) in National Health Service hospitals and (b) in publicly funded nursing homes. [81145]

Mr. Denham: National Health Service patients are not charged for their meals whilst in hospital. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced on 16 July 1998 that there would be no new NHS patient charges in the lifetime of this Parliament, and this included payment for meals.

Individuals placed by local authorities in residential care homes or nursing homes are expected to contribute to the costs of their care package, subject to a means test. This care package includes accommodation and meals.

Multiple Sclerosis

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance he has issued to health authorities about the criteria for NHS prescriptions for the drug Aricept. [81168]

Mr. Denham: In April 1998, we sent health authorities guidance from the Standing Medical Advisory Committee on the use of donepezil (Aricept). Copies of the guidance are available in the Library.

Sexual Health

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he plans to set up the working party on sexual health strategy. [81070]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 19 April 1999]: Preliminary consultations to develop a sexual and reproductive health framework are currently under way. An announcement on the composition of a small external reference group will be made shortly.

NHS Investment (Pensioners)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in what ways the £21 billion of extra investment in the NHS will be targeted on improving healthcare provision among those of pensionable age. [80942]

Mr. Hutton: The £21 billion extra investment in the National Health Service will mainly be distributed through general allocation. People aged 65 and over account for approximately 41 per cent. of total expenditure on hospital and community health services, although they make up 16 per cent. of the total population, and therefore will benefit significantly from this new investment.

Eye Test Charges

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the number of people who will benefit from the abolition of eye test charging for the over 60s. [80943]

Mr. Denham: We estimate that from 1 April 1999 some 6 million to 7 million more people aged 60 and over became eligible for free National Health Service sight tests.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 10 March 1999, Official Report, columns 298–99, on the Private Finance Initiative, if the contracts for the schemes which have reached financial closure contain any provision for monitoring as to whether they will be completed on time. [81367]

Mr. Denham: All the contracts for the major private finance initiative schemes which have reached financial close contain provisions which enable monitoring whether the scheme will be completed on time.

CABINET OFFICE

Annual Reports

Mr. Peter Bradley: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how many annual reports were produced by (a) Government departments, (b) executive agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies, and at what total cost, in the last year for which figures are available. [80857]

Mr. Kilfoyle: Information on the number and cost of annual reports is not held centrally. However, as a general rule, each of the 19 principal government departments and 135 executive agencies produces its own annual report, as do the vast majority of over 300 executive NDPBs. Smaller departments and advisory NDPBs either produce their own annual report or include information on their annual activities in a joint report or in the report of a parent department. Copies of all annual reports are available to Members from the Libraries of the House.

Modernising Government Logo

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office which organisations were approached to submit a tender for the contract to produce the Modernising Government logo; and where the tender for the contract was advertised. [80880]

Mr. Kilfoyle: The procurement of the design of the Modernising Government logo was organised and managed by the Central Office of Information (COI) on behalf of the Cabinet Office. The contract was not advertised.

Three design houses with a good track record of design on behalf of Government were chosen and invited to submit tenders. The design houses were Interbrand Newell and Sorrell, Pentogram, and Minale Tattersfield and Partners.

Minale Tattersfield and Partners was the successful bidder.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if the Modernising Government logo was tested on the public; and how much this research cost. [80882]

Mr. Kilfoyle: It was not.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what criteria were specified for the design of the Modernising Government logo. [80881]

Mr. Kilfoyle: The main criteria specified for the design of the Modernising Government logo were that it should remain fresh over the period of a change management programme lasting a number of years; be capable of application to a wide range of material such as literature, computer screens and stationery; be capable of complementing other logos and publication designs; and be upbeat, bold and distinctive.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what was the cost of developing the Modernising Government logo. [80879]

Mr. Kilfoyle: The direct cost of developing the Modernising Government logo was £41,020.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Legal Aid

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list which areas of expenditure in his Department in the non-criminal legal aid budget will be funded first when the criminal legal aid budget has been met; and if he will make a statement about how these areas have been determined. [R] [81120]

Mr. Hoon: It is an oversimplification to suggest that help through the Community Legal Service will be provided only after claims for criminal work. The Lord Chancellor has said that there will not be an overall budget for legal aid or a cash limit. In order to make the expenditure in each area transparent, the Lord Chancellor has made a commitment to inform Parliament immediately of any transfer of resources (other than a de minimis one) between the Criminal Defence Service and the Community Legal Service. The Lord Chancellor will direct national priorities for public funding taking account of the findings of need and the Government's intention to give priority to tackling social and economic exclusion. The White Paper "Modernising Justice" indicated that likely areas of priority would be social welfare cases; other cases of fundamental importance to the people affected (such as child protection, and protecting people from violence); and cases involving a wider public interest. The Access to Justice Bill places a duty on the Legal Services Commission to assess the need for legal services throughout the country and to inform the Lord Chancellor of its findings, these findings will be used to direct resources so that identified priority areas receive funding.

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what assumptions he has made about factors affecting the need for criminal legal aid with particular reference to (a) demographic trends, (b) economic trends, (c) social trends and (d) policy changes in arriving at the estimated expenditure on criminal legal aid for 1999–2000 and 2000–01; and if he will make a statement. [R] [81118]

Mr. Hoon: No explicit assumptions are made about demographic, economic or social trends. However, forecasts do take account of inflationary pressures and planned policy change effects. The assumptions underpinning the likely impact of policy change effects take account of price, volume and behavioural changes.

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department if he has set a level of funding for (a) civil legal aid and (b) advice and assistance below which he does not consider it viable to reduce them for (1) 1999–2000 and (2) 2000–01; and if he will make a statement. [R] [81119]

Mr. Hoon: No minimum levels of funding for civil legal aid and advice and assistance have been set. Neither I nor the Lord Chancellor believe that any Minister in a responsible Government would be willing to guarantee that a given level of spending on a particular function would be maintained, whatever financial pressures might fall unexpectedly on his or her Department.

We are, however, determined that the Community Legal Service, which will encompass civil legal aid and advice and assistance, will be properly funded. The available resources will be committed to the Community Legal Service through the system of contracting, and will be allocated to meet priority need. In order to provide contractors with reassurance that funding will not be suddenly cut or contracts terminated, the Lord Chancellor has asked the Legal Aid Board to extend from six to twelve months the notice that will need to be given to vary or terminate a contract, except in cases of misbehaviour or breach.

Solicitors (Limited Liability)

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to permit solicitors to practise as limited liability companies; and if he will make a statement. [R] [81097]

Mr. Hoon: Individual solicitors are already permitted to practise as limited liability companies although very few do. Limited Liability Partnerships are not at present permitted under English law. A Bill is currently being prepared by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry to introduce Limited Liability Partnerships into Great Britain. It will be for the Law Society to decide whether solicitors will be able to take advantage of this new way of structuring their businesses.

Conditional Fees (Insurance)

Sir Nicholas Lyell: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department, pursuant to his answer of 30 March 1999, Official Report, column 610, if he will publish such details of insurance products to support the use of conditional fees as are available to him. [81146]

Mr. Hoon: If the right hon. and learned Gentleman requires details of the products available, I suggest he approaches the providers of the insurance products. Those of which I am aware are:

First Assist;

Collegiate Insurance Brokers Ltd;

Abbey Legal Protection;

Amicus;

Eastgate Assistance;

Saturn Professional Risks Ltd;

Litigation Protection Ltd; and Greystoke Legal Services.

Queen's Counsel

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make public the names of all applicants for silk during the assessment process of their applications; and if he will make a statement. [81500]

Mr. Hoon: My noble and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor has no plans to publish the names of all applicants for Queen's Counsel at any stage of the silk process.

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will introduce fixed-term appointments for Queen's Counsel; and if he will make a statement. [81501]

Mr. Hoon: My noble and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor has no plans to introduce fixed term appointments for Queen's Counsel.

Convicted Murderers

Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department (1) how many cases there have been in the last 10 years in which convicted murderers who have themselves been victims of abuse by those they have murdered have (a) had their abusive experience taken into account as a mitigating circumstance and (b) not been given a custodial sentence; [80184]

(2) how many female victims of alleged domestic abuse by their partners who have been prosecuted for murdering that partner have been (a) acquitted and (b) convicted within the last 10 years; and what range of custodial sentence they have been given. [80182]

Mr. Boateng: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested is not available centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Police Reform

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will assess the benefits of using the concept of institutional (a) sectarianism and (b) anti-nationalism within the context of reforming policing in Northern Ireland. [80723]

Mr. Ingram: The Government consider equality of treatment and respect for different cultures as fundamental aspects of the ethos of any police service.

The terms of reference of the Independent Commission on policing, as established by the Good Friday Agreement, require the Commission to make proposals designed to ensure that policing arrangements, including composition, recruitment, training, culture, ethos and symbols, are such that the police service in Northern Ireland can enjoy widespread support from, and be seen as an integral part of, the community as a whole.

The Commission is consulting widely, and will report this Summer. The Government look forward to receiving the Commission's report.

Northern Ireland Assembly

Mr. MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if the cost of the Northern Ireland Assembly is drawn from the Northern Ireland grant; and what the costs of the Assembly (a) were in the 1998–99 financial year and (b) are projected to be in the 1999–2000 financial year. [81037]

Mr. Paul Murphy: Yes. 1998–99 expenditure was £10.6m. It will be for the Assembly to determine its operating costs in 1999–2000. In February, the Assembly Commission estimated this at £36m.

Policing Costs

Mr. MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if the cost of policing civil unrest continues to be a charge against the Northern Ireland grant; and what the cost of this policing has been in the 1998–99 financial year. [80914]

Mr. Ingram: Provision for the requirements of the Law and Order programmes is included within the overall Northern Ireland Departmental Expenditure Limit and will remain the responsibility of the Secretary of State after devolution.

The additional costs of the Royal Ulster Constabulary operations at Drumcree and elsewhere during July 1998 amounted to £11 million. Since July the additional costs incurred, in respect of the continuing presence needed to police the ongoing protest, are approximately £0.4 million per month.

The costs of policing other public disorder during 1998–99 are not readily available and would incur disproportionate cost to provide.

Paramilitary Violence

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list for the week ended Saturday 10 April the number of violent incidents involving paramilitary groups which took place in Northern Ireland, indicating how many involved (i) Loyalist and (ii) Republican groups. [80912]

Mr. Ingram: The number of security incidents during the period 4 April to 10 April 1999 are as shown:

Shooting incidents: 1

Bombing incidents: 1

Notes:

1. Figures may be subject to minor amendment
2. The bombing incident cannot as yet be firmly attributed to a grouping.

For the number of casualties as a result of paramilitary style attacks see the answer to uin 80913.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list for the week ended Saturday 10 April the number of (a) punishment beatings and (b) punishment shootings which took place in Northern Ireland indicating how many in each category were committed by (i) Loyalist and (ii) Republican groups. [80913]

Mr. Ingram: The number of casualties as a result of paramilitary style attacks during the period 4 April to 10 April are as follows:

	By Loyalist	By Republican
Assaults	Nil	1
Shootings	1	Nil

Note:
Figures may be subject to minor amendment

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list for the week ended Saturday 3 April the number of violent incidents involving paramilitary groups which took place in Northern Ireland, indicating how many involved (i) Loyalist and (ii) Republican groups. [80910]

Mr. Ingram: The number of security incidents during the period 28 March to 3 April 1999 are as shown:

	Number
Shooting incidents	1
Bombing incidents	4

Notes:

1. Figures may be subject to a minor amendment
2. The bombing incidents cannot as yet to be firmly attributed to a grouping

For the number of casualties as a result of paramilitary style attacks see the answer to uin 80911.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list for the week ended Saturday 3 April the number of (a) punishment beatings and (b) punishment shootings which took place in Northern Ireland indicating how many in each category were committed by (i) Loyalist and (ii) Republican groups. [80911]

Mr. Ingram: The number of casualties as a result of paramilitary style attacks during the period 28 March to 3 April are as follows:

	By Loyalist	By Republican
Assaults	nil	1
Shootings	1	nil

Note:
Figures may be subject to minor amendment

CS Sprays

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to her answer of 4 March 1999, Official Report, column 825, on CS sprays, for what reasons the Royal Ulster Constabulary has not been issued with CS sprays. [80870]

Mr. Ingram: The use of CS spray is relatively recent innovation in British policing. The Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary keeps under review the personal protective equipment available to and approved for use by police officers throughout the United Kingdom. The risks and threats to police officers in Northern Ireland have demanded protective measure different from their colleagues in the rest of the United Kingdom. All options are however kept under review.

CR Gas

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to her answer of 4 March 1999, Official Report, columns 825–26, if CR gas has been issued to the Royal Ulster Constabulary since 1969. [80869]

Mr. Ingram: CR tear gas is not issued to the Royal Ulster Constabulary.

Professional Statisticians

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many staff by grade are employed as professional statisticians in her Department; how many of these staff have been accepted as fast stream by the Civil Service Selection Board; and how many have been granted chartered statistician status by the Royal Statistical Society; [81197]

(2) how many staff who have worked as professional statisticians in the Northern Ireland Civil Service have left on early retirement in each of the past 10 years. [81173]

Mr. Paul Murphy: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Statistics Research Agency under its Chief Executive, Mr. E. F. Jardine. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from E. F. Jardine to Mr. Menzies Campbell, dated 20 April 1999:

I am replying to your questions to the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland about the employment of professional statisticians as this matter falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Northern Ireland Statistics and Research Agency (NISRA).

The Agency employs 127 staff with the generic title 'Statistician'. These staff perform a broad range of analytical functions including statistical work, social surveys and social research. The staff are graded as follows:

	Number
Senior Civil Service	1
Senior Principal Statistician	2
Grade 7 Statistician	17
Deputy Principal Statistician	41
Assistant Statistician	66

1. A further 11 staff, originally recruited to the discipline, are now working in administrative grades.
2. These figures exclude staff who are not in post, ie. who are on secondment or on career breaks.

Two NISRA staff are Chartered Statisticians and a further six are RSS Fellows. In the past 10 years 1 professional statistician has left on early retirement.

In addition, 4 Economists in the Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland undertake statistical activities which parallel those performed by members of the Government Statistical Service in MAFF. Two of these staff are at Grade 7 and two are Assistant Statistician equivalent.

NISRA does not recruit 'Statisticians' by the fast stream method. Staff are selected through Northern Ireland Civil Service recruitment competitions following a series of tests and interview.

If I can be of further assistance do not hesitate to contact me.

HEALTH

Spectacles (Children)

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action the Government are taking to publicise free availability of spectacles for children. [79050]

Mr. Denham: Under the National Health Service optical voucher scheme children under the age of 16 and young people aged 16 to 18, who are in full time education, are entitled to an optical voucher which they may use to buy spectacles from a basic range or, if they choose, put towards the cost of more expensive spectacles or contact lenses. These arrangements are publicised in the following leaflets which the Department distributes to a wide range of public premises including optical practices, doctors' surgeries, pharmacies, post offices and social security offices:

HC11 "Are you entitled to help with health costs".

HC12 "NHS charges and optical voucher values".

HIV

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he has taken (a) to implement the Stocktake Group report on support for HIV services and (b) to require health authorities to take timely decisions on funding HIV related services in financial year 1999–2000; and if he will make a statement. [79704]

Ms Jowell: I am currently considering the recommendations of the Stocktake Group on the long-term future funding of HIV/AIDS treatment and care. Notification of the HIV/AIDS treatment and care and HIV prevention budgets for 1999–2000 was made to health authorities on 15 April, and a copy of the Allocations Working Paper (AWP (99–00) HA36) showing initial allocations to each health authority has been placed in the House of Commons Library. Guidance to health authorities on the use of these funds will be issued shortly.

Biggleswade and Steppingley Hospitals

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received from mid-Bedfordshire general practitioners with regard to the review of Biggleswade and Steppingley hospitals. [80460]

Mr. Denham: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 14 April 1999, Official Report, column 269.

Clinical Excellence

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on Government policy on the development of regional and sub-regional centres of clinical and medical excellence and the role of (a) local hospitals and (b) health resource centres in the context of the move towards regional and sub-regional concentration. [80455]

Mr. Denham: We are committed to the development of clinical excellence at all levels within the National Health Service, as set out in "A First Class Service: Quality in the NHS". National Service Frameworks and guidance issued nationally by the Government support health authorities and trusts in the development of clinical excellence locally.

However, it is for health authorities, primary care groups and NHS trusts to determine the most appropriate range and configurations of health services to meet local needs.

DTP Vaccine

Mr. Ian Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when research projects (a) started and (b) concluded at Porton Down into the development of an acellular DTP vaccine; how much the research programme cost; and when and for what reasons the Government decided to purchase such vaccines in the United States rather than continue development in the UK. [80646]

Ms Jowell: Work on acellular pertussis vaccine commenced at the Centre for Applied Microbiology and Research (CAMR) (as the then named Microbiological Research Establishment under the Ministry of Defence) in 1974 and continued until 1993–94. Costs for the period 1974 to 1979 when the centre was under the Ministry of Defence are not available. Costs to the Public Health Laboratory Service (PHLS) and the Department from 1979 to 1993–94 (when the PHLS managed CAMR) were some £2.7 million, although some additional costs would have been incurred by PHLS and the Medical Research Council for clinical trials and by Porton Speywood for vaccine manufacture and trials.

The acellular pertussis vaccine development at CAMR was discontinued when the CAMR vaccine was not selected by international researchers for inclusion in trials comparing candidate pertussis vaccines. However, the agglutinogen components, the novel feature of the CAMR vaccine, were subsequently incorporated into a Canadian manufactured vaccine, along with other components not in the CAMR vaccine. This Canadian vaccine has been shown in studies to be the only acellular vaccine to provide protection comparable to that from the presently used UK whole cell pertussis vaccine. The studies have also shown that there is little difference in the level of local reactions and fever seen after use of the United Kingdom whole cell pertussis vaccine when compared to acellular pertussis vaccines under the immunisation schedule used in the UK.

The United States of America manufactured acellular vaccine purchased for UK use was chosen since it was the only single antigen, that is pertussis only, vaccine available.

Air Quality

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his estimate of (a) the annual number of early deaths and hospital admissions currently attributable to particle pollution, (b) the reduction in early deaths and hospital admissions by 2005, if the whole of the UK were to meet its current national air quality objective for particles and (c) the reduction in early deaths and hospital admissions by 2005, if the whole of the UK were to meet the proposed EC Air Quality Daughter Directive Stage 1 limit value for particles. [80782]

Ms Jowell: The Department has quantified the impact on health from current and future levels of airborne particle (PM_{10}) concentrations in the United Kingdom as follows.

The Committee on the Medical Effects of Air Pollutants' report 'Quantification of the Effects of Air Pollution on Health in the United Kingdom' concluded that PM_{10} concentrations in 1996 were likely to have brought forward the deaths of around 8,100 people in the UK. It also concluded that PM_{10} concentrations in 1996 contributed to about 10,500 respiratory hospital admissions, which may have been brought forward or additional. In both cases the people most at risk are likely to be the elderly suffering from chronic heart and lung diseases.

The Government recently published their proposals for review of the National Air Quality Strategy, and, in particular, their proposals for revised and additional objectives for the pollutants. During the review process, as a result of a better understanding of the sources and types of particles in the UK provided by the work of the Airborne Particles Expert Group, it became apparent that the current PM_{10} objective would not be achievable in a number of local authority areas with any measures that are currently practicable. The Expert Group's work also revealed the importance of non-UK sources and the limit to which local authority and central Government action alone could control levels of PM_{10}. The Government are consulting on a proposal to replace the current PM_{10} objective with the Stage 1 limit values in the European Community Air Quality Daughter Directive, while retaining the current objective as an indicative level. Although sufficient information was not available to estimate the benefits of meeting the current objective across the whole of the UK, further work is planned to estimate the benefits of reducing levels of PM_{10} below the limit values as part of the next review of the Strategy.

The Government will reconsider the indicative level for particles once clear evidence is available on the significance of $PM_{2.5}$ for health with a view, potentially, to setting an objective based on concentration of this finer fraction. Discussions are also in progress with the UK's EC partners to explore ways of reducing the transboundary particle problem.

There is expected to be a cumulative reduction of about 5,000 early deaths and about 4,000 respiratory hospital admissions over the period 1996 to 2005 as a result of agreed measures to reduce PM_{10}[1]. (Calculations for the year 2005 alone would give about 900 fewer early deaths and about 750 fewer respiratory hospital admissions than in 1996). In a typical year, the predicted concentrations of PM_{10} in 2005 would meet the proposed EC Stage 1 limit value at all urban background locations. There are however likely to be exceedences at busy roadsides in some large urban areas and possibly in the vicinity of some industrial plants.

Complementary Medicines

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list details of reported cases, over the last five years, of allergic reactions to (a) homeopathic medicines, (b) herbal medicines and (c) vitamin and mineral supplements. [81064]

Ms Jowell: Suspected adverse drug reactions reported to the Committee on Safety of Medicines are recorded according to the active drug substance and reports for homeopathic medicines are not specifically identified as such. It is therefore not possible to provide a list of reported allergic reactions to homeopathic medicines.

The total number of suspected adverse drug reaction reports for any medicine containing a herbal ingredient, for the period 1 January 1994 to 31 December 1998, was 174. Suspected allergic reactions associated with medicines containing at least one herbal constituent, reported to the Committee on Safety of Medicines for the period 1 January 1994 until 31 December 1998, are given in the table.

Patient sex	Suspect drug	Reaction	Outcome of Reaction
F	Pripsen	Allergic reaction	Recovered after drug withdrawal
F	Colpermin	Allergic reaction	Not known
F	Ledermix dental kit	Anaphylactic reaction	Recovered after treatment
F	Anusol cream	Allergic reaction	Recovering after treatment
F	Arnica extract	Allergic reaction	Not recovered
M	Quiet Life	Allergic rash	Recovering
F	Colpermin	Allergic reaction	Not known
M	Regulan	Allergic rash	Recovered after drug withdrawal

The Yellow Card Scheme for reporting adverse drug reactions was extended to include unlicensed herbal medicines in October 1996.The total number of suspected adverse drug reaction reports for any medicine containing one or more of the drug substances: ascorbic acid, retinol, riboflavine, thiamine, pyridoxine, nicotinamide, cyanocobalamin, tocopherol, folic acid, iron, calcium, zinc, magnesium, phosphorus, sodium fluoride, for the period 1 January 1994 to 31 December 1998, was 543. Suspected allergic reactions associated with these drug substances (excluding reports for injectable supplements), reported to the Committee on Safety of Medicines for the period 1 January 1994 until 31 December 1998, are given in the table.

Patient sex	Suspect dr	Reaction(s)	Outcome of Reaction
F	Redoxon, Ca	Allergic reaction, face oedema, pyrexia, eye inflammation	Not known
F	Folic acid, Ferrous gluconate, Ascorbic acid	Anaphylactic reaction	Recovered after treatment

The number of suspected adverse drug reactions reported for a particular drug substance depends on a number of factors, including the extent of use of the drug and the reporting rate for the drug. Medicines in the above categories are often supplied without prescription and it is generally recognised that the reporting rate for medicines supplied over the counter is lower than that for prescription medicines.

Genetically Modified Organisms

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many times officials from his Department have met officials from the US Government to discuss genetically modified organisms and the biotechnology industry since 1 June 1998; if he will list the dates and locations of each meeting; and with which US Government department his officials had meetings. [81077]

Ms Jowell: Officials from the Department have regular contact with officials from other countries, including the United States of America, for example by joint attendance at conferences. However, no meetings have taken place with officials from the United States of America Government to specifically discuss genetically modified organisms and the biotechnology industry.

Midwives Conference

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for what reasons his Department withdrew its proposed stand from the Conference of the Royal College of Midwives in Glasgow; and if he will make a statement. [81416]

Ms Jowell: Since the conference was planned to take place shortly before the elections to the Scottish Parliament, it was not thought appropriate for the Government to take a publicity stand.

Mental Health

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he last met representatives of the black and ethnic minority communities to discuss mental health treatment. [81411]

Mr. Hutton: I held a meeting with representatives of black and minority ethnic interests on 31 March 1999 to discuss the development of the Mental Health National Service Framework.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of the NHS budget was allocated to mental health services for each of the last three years. [81412]

Mr. Hutton: A national weighted capitation formula is used as the basis for allocating hospital and community health services revenue to health authorities. The purpose of the formula is to set targets to enable the equitable distribution of resources based on the health care requirements of different resident populations. This cannot be broken down into a mental health component.

The proportion of total health authority expenditure spent on mental illness was 9.24 per cent. for 1997–98, 8.38 per cent. for 1996–97 and 11.44 per cent. for 1995–96.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice he has given to health authorities regarding mental health treatment for members of the black and ethnic minority communities. [81410]

Mr. Hutton: Advice sent to health authorities on mental health treatment applies equally to all users of mental health services, whatever their ethnic origin.

The Government's strategy document "Modernising Mental Health Services: safe, sound and supportive" makes clear the Government's commitment to ensuring that everyone with mental health problems is treated fairly, on the basis of need, in a manner which preserves their autonomy and which promotes opportunity for choice. This document was distributed to every health authority in December 1998.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the principal advances in treatment which have been implemented in mental health since 1995. [81413]

Mr. Hutton: Information about the advances in treatments for those with mental health problems is available in the academic literature. An example of this is the collation of the latest research by the Cochrane Group, copies of which are available in the Library.

The Cochrane Library is a regularly updated library designed to give the evidence needed for informed health care decision making. Launched in 1995 under the name of The Cochrane Database of Systematic Reviews, it has been renamed to reflect the inclusion of further important databases.

The Cochrane Controlled Trials Register is a bibliography of over 150,000 controlled trials identified by contributors to the Cochrane Collaboration and others including many trials not currently listed on Medline or other bibliographical databases.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many mental health patients were treated on the NHS over the last five years. [81414]

Mr. Hutton: The table shows the estimated number of finished consultant episodes (FCEs) under a mental health[1] specialty in National Health Service trusts in England, 1993–94 to 1997–98.

[1] Mental Health specialties are as follows: mental handicap; mental illness; child and adolescent psychiatry; forensic psychiatry; psychotherapy; old age psychiatry.

Year	Estimated number of FCEs under a mental health specialty
1993–94	293,720
1994–95	295,470
1995–96	297,510
1996–97[1]	263,550
1997–98[1]	244,090

[1] Data for these years are provisional; final figures are likely to be higher due to adjustments for shortfalls in data.

National Institute for Clinical Excellence

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he intends the composition of the appraisal groups established by the National Institute for Clinical Excellence to be in accordance with the proposals made in the document, Faster Access to Modern Treatment. [81230]

Mr. Denham: Ministers are considering the response to the discussion document "Faster Access to Modern Treatment: how NICE appraisal will work" and further announcements will be made shortly.

Medicines Control Agency

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the high level targets for the Medicines Control Agency for 1999–2000. [81848]

Ms Jowell: The high level targets for the Medicines Control Agency are included in its Annual Business Plan, copies of which have been placed in the Library today.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Bypasses

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what non-road solutions county councils should demonstrate they have considered when putting forward a request for funding for a village bypass designed to reduce the volume of traffic passing through that village. [80581]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The allocation of central government funding for local transport projects will in future be based on 5-year local transport plans. Revised guidance for local authorities on preparation of their provisional local transport plans was published on 12 April. Where a major road scheme forms part of a plan we will expect it to have been assessed using the New Approach to Appraisal (NATA) developed during the 1997/98 review of the trunk road programme.

NATA requires the identification of alternative options capable of addressing the transport problem. Possible options will depend on the nature of the problem. In the case of heavy traffic flows through a village they might include alternative traffic management strategies; seeking to reduce traffic flows by encouraging a shift to alternative forms of transport; or introduction of traffic calming measures to reduce the adverse impacts of the traffic. This process should also include assessment of different routes and standards for any bypass.

Vehicle Excise Duty

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will estimate the cost of reducing vehicle excise duty on gas-fuelled vehicles to £20. [80013]

Ms Glenda Jackson: At 31 December 1998, DVLA records showed a total of 2,669 licensed gas vehicles in Great Britain. Of these, 420 were licensed in exempt classes and the large majority of the remainder were licensed either as Private or Light Goods vehicles or as agricultural vehicles. We therefore estimate that the revenue cost of reducing vehicle excise duty to £20 on these vehicles would be substantially less than £1 million. However, the Government are encouraging the switch to gas and other low pollutant fuels and we would expect the number of gas-powered vehicles to increase significantly in the future.

Regional Development

Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what resources have been allocated to regional development agencies for 1999–2000. [81847]

Mr. Caborn: The allocations are as follows:

Development Agency	£ million
North East	121.198
North West	176.104
Yorkshire and the Humber	136.633
West Midlands	114.111
East Midlands	59.184
East of England	31.397
South West	60.138
South East England	73.410
Total	772.175

These are substantial allocations and reflect the fact that Regional Development Agencies (RDAs) will play a major part in implementing the strategies that they will be developing for their regions as a whole.

RDAs' budgets are made up from the DETR-funded regeneration programmes which they have inherited from English Partnerships (EP), the Government Offices for the Regions and the Rural Development Commission, together with money from the Department of Trade and Industry for inward investment and competitiveness, and from the Department for Education and Employment for skills development. They also include RDAs' own running costs. Regeneration programmes make up 87 per cent. of the total budget and variations in allocations reflect the regions' different regeneration needs. In addition, RDAs will receive funding from EP to carry out the Coalfields Programme, totalling some £50 million in 1999–2000.

The allocations exclude EP's Partnership Investment Programme (PIP), totalling £145 million in 1999–2000 which will remain with EP pending the resolution of issues which the Government is currently discussing with the European Commission. However, the RDAs and EP will be co-operating closely on PIP projects.

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what the value is of the commitments that have been entered into which are (a) legally binding and (b) agreed in principle by Government Departments in the regions, English Partnership and other public bodies in relation to economic development in the (i) North West, (ii) North East and (iii) Yorkshire and Humberside regions for the years (1) 1999–2000, (2) 2000–01 and (3) 2001–02. [81088]

Mr. Caborn: Information is not available in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what resources are being made available from public funds in (i) 1999–2000, (ii) 2000–01, and (iii) 2001–02 for economic development in the (a) North West, (b) North East and (c) Yorkshire and Humberside regions through (1) their regional development agencies and (2) other sources. [81089]

Mr. Caborn: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer which I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for St. Helens, North (Mr. Watts). Information about funding through regional development agencies is also contained in the Department's 1999 Annual Report (Cm 4204), copies of which are available in the Library of the House. The other information is not available in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Secondment

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the names of the officials at his Department who are currently on secondment from private companies and the companies by which they are employed. [81121]

Mr. Meacher: There are currently 26 people on secondment to the Department from private companies. They are listed in the table. This answer also covers Government Offices, the responsibility for which is shared with the Secretaries of State for Education and Employment and Trade and Industry.

Road Haulage Industry

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list for each of the vehicles listed in Schedule I, paragraphs 3, 5, 6 and 8 of the 1999 Finance Bill the costs in each European Union Country, of (a) any taxes paid, and the rate of such tax on (i) a new vehicle, (ii) a second-hand vehicle, (b) the vehicle excise duty or the equivalent tax, (c) the total tax on a litre of fuel, (d) tax paid on lubricants, (e) running commercial vehicles, on average, (f) running commercial vehicles per mile, (g) running a commercial vehicle for a year, (h) running a commercial vehicle for 100,000 miles, (i) running a commercial vehicle over the average life of such a vehicle, the estimates of (e) (f) (g) (h) and (i) all to be exclusive of salaries and wages, and where the vehicle descriptions are not the same in each country all figures and sums to relate to the nearest equivalent vehicle in each country and all sums to be shown in Sterling. [81155]

Dr. Reid [holding answer 16 April 1999]: The information requested by the hon. Member is not available in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, my Department estimates that the cost of running a fleet of 50 38 tonne trucks will be about £425,000 higher in France than in the UK; about £600,000 more in the Netherlands; and about £800,000 more in Belgium.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the amount of subsidy paid to the road haulage industry in each European Union country in the last financial year; and if he will indicate the basis on which such help is determined. [81158]

Dr. Reid [holding answer 16 April 1999]: Explicit subsidy to the road haulage industry in EU Member States is generally prohibited by European Community State Aid rules, but assistance can be provided to promote research or the development of more economical transport systems and technologies, to eliminate excess capacity which causes serious structural problems, to facilitate the development of combined transport or to compensate for public service obligations. Information is not available about the extent to which such payments are made in other Member States.

However, there is considerable variance in the extent to which the road haulage industries in Member States meet their full costs—to the economy, environment and infrastructure. This depends on the levels of taxation and haulage industry-related expenditure in each country.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what was the tonnage of goods transported by the UK road haulage industry in each of the last three years (i) within the UK, (ii) from the UK and (iii) into the UK; and what was the tonnage of goods moved by vehicles (a) owned by and (b) operated from other EU countries in each of those years. [81157]

Dr. Reid [holding answer 16 April 1999]: The tonnage of goods transported by UK-registered goods vehicles over 3.5 tonnes gross weight in 1995, 1996 and 1997 (the last three years for which figures are available) was:

	Within the UK million tonnes	From the UK thousand tonnes	Into the UK thousand tonnes
1995	1,655	6,607	6,977
1996	1,683	7,279	7,802
1997	1,693	7,539	7,984

Statistics are unavailable about vehicles owned by or operated from other EU countries. However, figures suggest that the amount of local cabotage carried out by foreign registered trucks was significantly less than 1 per cent. This is an issue which may be addressed by the Road Haulage Forum.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is his estimate of the extent of over-capacity of the road haulage industry in the United Kingdom; what proportion of the road haulage vehicles operating in the UK are (i) UK owned, (ii) UK registered and (iii) from other EU countries. [81154]

Dr. Reid [holding answer 16 April 1999]: No reliable comprehensive estimate of the over-capacity in the haulage industry in the UK exists at present but we believe it to be significant. A comprehensive assessment of over-capacity is an issue which may be addressed as part of the work of the Haulage Industry Forum.

Information on the nationality of ownership of vehicles is not held by my Department. The proportion of international freight journeys to and from the UK undertaken by UK hauliers in the 12 months ending September 1998—the latest period for which statistics are available—was 44 per cent., which is little different from the long-term average. In 1997—the latest date for which we have information—we understand that the overall level of cabotage by EU hauliers within the UK accounted for substantially less than 1 per cent. of total freight moved.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the items he took into account when estimating the running costs of a goods vehicle in (i) the United Kingdom and (ii) each of the other EU countries. [81153]

Dr. Reid [holding answer 16 April 1999]: The estimates of relative running costs between the UK and certain other EU member states issued by my Department concerned the relative costs of setting up a fleet of 50 vehicles involved in international transport. Items taken into account included labour costs and taxes, corporation tax and annual circulation taxes (i.e. vehicle excise duty or its equivalent). For international operations, the estimates assumed the same levels of fuel costs, because those operating internationally—whether UK or foreign owned—can take advantage of the lowest fuel costs on their route.

Parkway Site, South Yorkshire

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will publish his decision on whether to allow Rotherham Metropolitan Borough Council to determine the planning application for retail stores on the Parkway/Poplar Way site at Catcliffe, South Yorkshire, for Sterling Capital Securities plc; and if he will make a statement. [81480]

Mr. Raynsford: The Secretary of State will issue his decision on this case as soon as possible. It would be inappropriate to make a further statement at this time.

Rural Action for the Environment

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment his Department has made of the benefit of the Rural Action for the Environment scheme; and what support will be made available for the continuation of this scheme in 1999–2000. [81392]

Mr. Meale [holding answer 19 April 1999]: I refer to my answer of 12 January 1999, Official Report, columns 169 and 187.

I understand that the Countryside Agency, together with English Nature, will conduct, over the coming year, a comprehensive review of local community based action, including Rural Action for the Environment, and the benefits of small grants in achieving that. The funding which they are making available to the Rural Action county networks will support the networks' input to that review.

More recently, the National Lottery Charities Board (NLCB) has offered funding to a consortium led by Action with Communities in Rural England (ACRE), and including the British Trust for Conservation Volunteers and the Wildlife Trust Partnership, for a body—not yet constituted but also, I understand, intended to be called Rural Action—to run a programme of support for disadvantaged rural groups with a view to helping them undertake sustainable local projects. ACRE has approached DETR for grant aid in support of the NLCB offer, and this is under consideration.

Transport Costs

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his oral answer to the hon. Member for Workington (Mr. Campbell-Savours), of 13 April 1999, Official Report, column 9, concerning transport costs per tonne-kilometre, when he will produce such an analysis; whether such an analysis will be produced by a firm without other contractual links with the Government; and if he will make a statement. [81600]

Dr. Reid [holding answer 20 April 1999]: The Road Haulage Forum which was set up in conjunction with industry will look at potential indicators and statistics relevant to the current debate over road haulage. Additionally the ongoing review of lorry VED, announced by the Chancellor in the March 1998 Budget, will continue to examine the basis on which lorry VED is determined, in terms of road track costs and environmental impact.

Genetically Modified Crops

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement about Government plans to supervise experiments on genetically modified crops. [80317]

Mr. Meacher: I refer my hon. Friend to my answer of 15 April 1999, Official Report, columns 301–02, to my hon. Friend the Member for Nottingham, South (Mr. Simpson).

Motorcycling Advisory Group

Ms Blears: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he plans to establish a motorcycling advisory group. [81949]

Ms Glenda Jackson: My noble Friend Lord Whitty, the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, will be chairing the first meeting of the Motorcycling Advisory Group on 6 May. This follows a preliminary meeting we had with industry representatives in December last year to hear their views before widening the debate to take forward policy on the role of motorcycling in integrated transport. We are bringing together Government, representatives of the industry and those interested in the effects of motorcycling to discuss a range of issues which will allow us to develop well informed policies.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Export Credit Guarantees

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the 10 companies in receipt of the highest level of export credit guarantees for the financial year 1997–98, indicating the amount of cover given for each company and listing the projects for which the cover was given. [80116]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 13 April 1999]: The information is as follows:

Value of contracts supported under EGCD guarantees issued in 1997–98—top 10 exporters

Exporter	Nature of projects	Markets	Value of contracts (£ million)
British Aerospace	Defence	Saudi Arabia, Qatar	[1]2,132
	Civil Aerospace	Indonesia, Canada, Korea, Philippines, Croatia, Portugal, China, El Salvador, Turkey, Mauritius, Colombia	[1]427
Chiyoda-Foster Wheeler	LNG plant	Oman	372
Taylor Woodrow/Skanska Joint Venture	Rail Transportation	Russia	146
Marconi Avionics	Radio Communications	USA	109

VAI Industries	Steel Mill	South Africa	81
AMEC International	Construction	Hong Kong	80
Balfour Beatty	Construction	Egypt	73
Rolls Royce	Aero Engines	UAE	61
Kvaerner Cleveland Bridge	Construction	China	55

[1] Values also include amounts in respect of Rolls Royce aero engines

Macpherson Inquiry

Mr. Efford: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the implications for his Department of the Macpherson Inquiry recommendations; and if he will make a statement. [80534]

Dr. Howells: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office on 14 April 1999, Official Report, column 239.

This Department has already launched a Programme of Action for Racial Equality. Its key objectives are to address the problem of under-representation of ethnic minority staff at middle and senior management levels within the Department and raise awareness of racial equality issues among all of its staff. The Department will continue to review its policies in the light of the inquiry's recommendations.

Trade and the Environment Symposium

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the outcome of the High Level Symposium on Trade and the Environment in Geneva on 15 and 16 March. [79662]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 13 April 1999]: The aim of the High Level Symposium on trade and the environment was to promote a constructive debate between capital-based representatives of national governments from developed and developing countries as well as members of civil society and international bodies. Although no conclusions were reached, improved understanding between the different communities will help to build consensus that trade and the environment should be included in a comprehensive New Round of trade negotiations.

Small Business Service

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate he has made of the annual running cost of the Small Business Service. [80820]

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate he has made of the annual budget of the Small Business Service over each of the next five years. [81063]

Mr. Wills: The specific responsibilities of the Small Business Service will be decided after a period of consultation with a wide range of interested parties, which is likely to conclude in late summer. It is not possible to make an estimate of annual running costs of the SBS in advance of decisions about responsibilities.

Strategic Exports

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will introduce legislation to require the publication of annual reports on strategic exports and to permit scrutiny by relevant parliamentary bodies. [81171]

Mr. Byers: The suggestion that publication of an Annual Report should be made a statutory requirement was made by Oxfam in their response to the Government's White Paper on Strategic Export Controls, published in July 1998 (cm 3989). This will be considered as part of the review of the White Paper proposals in the light of all the responses to it.

The Government's first annual report on strategic export controls was published on 25 March 1999, as noted by my right hon. Friend the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in his answer of that date to my hon. Friend the Member for Erewash (Liz Blackman) Official Report, column 343. In its recent report on Strategic Export Controls (HC65), the Trade and Industry Committee noted that it had, in conjunction with other Select Committees, proposed on an experimental basis a system of joint inquiry by select committees on the first Annual Report, and that the report of that committee could be expected to make detailed proposals based on experience as to how the exercise should be managed next time around. In its response to the report (HC270) the Government welcomed this plan.

Export Controls

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 30 March 1999, Official Report, columns 571–72, on export controls, what estimate he has made of the length of time which it will take the Governments of (a) Algeria and (b) Jordan to repay the debt arising from Export Credits Guarantee Department claims for sales to defence buyers. [80941]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 19 April 1999]: Under the terms of the current UK/Algeria and UK/Jordan Debt Agreements covering both civil and military debt, the final repayments are due on 30 November 2011 and 30 April 2016 respectively. Jordan is in the process of negotiating a new IMF programme which is expected to involve a further rescheduling of its Paris Club debt.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. Ennis: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress is being made by UK offshore oil and gas producers and oil companies to deal with the millennium bug; and what measures have been taken by his Department to ensure the security of concessionary coal supplies over this period. [81700]

Mr. Wills: I can now report the findings of the independent assessment process established by the DTI which confirms that UK oil companies and offshore gas producers are on track to ensure that there will be no major disruption to supplies due to the Year 2000 threat to computer systems. The DTI has taken on the role of "responsible body" reporting to the ACTION 2000 National Infrastructure Forum on the Year 2000 preparations being made by the oil industry and UK's offshore oil and gas producers.

The DTI has approached this task in a systematic way, making full use of the industry's own resources. It has engaged W. S. Atkins Consultants Limited—an internationally known and highly respected engineering consultancy with extensive experience within the oil and gas industry—to independently validate the process adopted and its results. The industry has fully supported this important work and provided full and frank access to all the relevant information and staff.

The independent verification approach adopted by DTI has been agreed with ACTION 2000 and designed to build on the work already in hand by offshore and onshore companies to avoid duplication of effort. It has been closely supported by the relevant trade associations (UKOOA—UK Offshore Oil Operators Association, UKPIA—UK Petroleum Industry Association and AUKOI—Association of UK Oil Independents).

For the offshore sector, DTI arranged for companies to conduct a stringent assessment process supported by UKOOA, which involved preparation of a report on each operator's state of readiness and its independent confirmation by, either a "peer group assessor" or an external consultant.

To further enhance the independent element in this process, W. S. Atkins carried out a programme of visits to review the process adopted, the supporting data and its conclusions. The format and extent of the visit programme was determined by W. S. Atkins. It covered all the key elements of the offshore oil and gas industry including production and onshore terminal/pipeline facilities, and was designed to ensure they could reach a fair view on the overall status of the upstream industry.

For the downstream oil sector covering the supply and distribution of refined oil products, W. S. Atkins were engaged to carry out a more intensive role. They prepared and issued on behalf of DTI a detailed and closely targeted questionnaire to all the main downstream players. Following a detailed analysis of the responses W. S. Atkins conducted a series of detailed on-site follow-up visits designed to validate the questionnaire responses. Officials from DTI and other interested Government Departments also participated in some of the visits.

Again the visit programme was determined by W. S. Atkins and designed to ensure that they were able to form a fair view of the overall status of the downstream industry. The programme was carefully planned to cover all aspects of the industry. It looked vertically through the supply chain and covered refining, pipelines, distribution terminals, and retail outlets. It embraced all sectors of the industry from the majors, and hypermarkets through mid-size players to smaller retailers. It extended throughout the UK covering locations in England, Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland.

Throughout the process, DTI has worked closely with Action 2000, other responsible bodies and the various trade bodies to ensure nothing was overlooked and ensure that the process adopted reflected good Year 2000 practice.

At the National Infrastructure Forum meeting in January 1999, the industry attracted an overall "amber" assessment against the standard colour code adopted by ACTION 2000. I am pleased to report that W. S. Atkins have confirmed that the industry has since then made substantial progress both onshore and offshore. Copies of their summary reports have been placed in the Libraries of the House, and copies made available on the DTI internet site. W. S. Atkins have also confirmed that the validation process adopted by DTI provides an effective means of independently validating the industry's state of progress, both in terms of its suitability to the offshore/onshore sector, and general good practice in relation to Year 2000 risk assessment.

In detail W. S. Atkins found that more than half of the offshore operators and almost two thirds of the downstream industry now merit a blue assessment (no identified risks of material disruption), and that the remainder were on track to attain that rating once work scheduled during the normal summer shutdown period has been completed, and residual contingency planning and external dependency issues had been finalised.

The DTI has agreed a follow up plan with W. S. Atkins, to monitor progress on the outstanding issues and carry out a further programme of independent check visits to confirm that the scheduled work has been completed successfully. DTI will report on this work at the National Infrastructure Forum meeting in October 1999, and will continue to monitor the industry's progress throughout the millennium period.

Regarding coal, the Department is responsible for supplying concessionary fuel to some 90,000 former employees of British Coal. This accounts for 20–25 per cent. of all solid fuel for domestic use. Currently, two large coal companies are under contract to DTI for the supply and distribution of concessionary fuel (CPL Distribution Ltd. and T. H. Fergusson).

The Department appointed Aon Risk Services Ltd. (risk management consultants) to assess the security of supply of concessionary fuel over the millennium period. This covered the fuel distributors as well as a number of major producers. In addition, Aon was asked to advise on the position in the wider retail market for household coal in so far that the same systems are used by the companies under contract to DTI for distributing concessionary supplies. Aon's conclusions are very encouraging with all the main operators achieving blue rating. The remaining 5 per cent. merit amber rating but are on course to achieve blue rating by October. Aon will be involved in continued monitoring of the position.

Manufacturing (Over-Production)

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the extent of world-wide over-production in (a) steel, (b) petrochemicals and (c) other manufacturing industries; and if he will make a statement. [80892]

Mr. Wilson: My Department has not made such assessments.

Internet Trading

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate he has made of the value of trading over the internet in the United Kingdom in each of the last three years. [81060]

Mr. Wills: Commercially available surveys suggest that in 1998 some £350 million was spent on-line in the UK, which is expected to grow to around £5 billion in 2002.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Environmental Appraisals

Mr. Truswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what environmental appraisals of policy his Department has (a) completed, (b) started and (c) planned. [79629]

Mr. Charles Clarke: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by the Under-Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, my hon. Friend the Member for Mansfield (Mr. Meale), on 13 April 1999, Official Report, column 66.

Over-50s (Job Initiatives)

Mr. Bruce George: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the initiatives taken since 1 May 1997 to help those over 50 years obtain employment. [80790]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Since 1 May 1997, we have introduced a wide range of new measures to help people over 50 to find work. These contribute to our policy of "Better Government for Older People".

In November 1998, I launched for public consultation the draft Code of Practice on Age Diversity in Employment. This was well received and the final version of the Code will be published in May together with case studies and guidance for employers.

The New Deal for people over 50 was announced by the Chancellor in last month's Budget. This will help people over 50 who have been out of work and on income replacement benefits for more than 6 months, and their dependent partners. It introduces an Employment Credit of £60 a week, £40 for those working part time, for those with incomes of less than £15,000 a year. There will also be learning support of up to £750; guidance from a personal adviser wand extra jobsearch help. This will start in selected pathfinder areas in October and be extended to all parts of the country early in 2000. A consultative document on the detail of this New Deal will be issued shortly.

People aged over 50 also benefit from the steps we have taken to strengthen services for unemployed people generally. Some of the prototype Employment Zones have been developing new approaches to tackling the barriers faced by people over 50. Elsewhere pilots under the New Deal for people over 25 have also been offering special help for people over 50. This New Deal offers a range of help and advice, including a subsidy of £75 a week for employers who recruit people who have been without work for 2 years. The total number of 50+ clients invited to attend an initial interview for the New Deal 25+ pilots is around 2,000. The total number of 50+ clients joining Gateway is just under 2,000. For the New Deal 25+ (June measures) to the end of January 1999, 26,550 people aged 50+ had been invited to attend an initial interview.

The New Deal for Disabled People is piloting a personal adviser service in 12 areas and innovative projects to help disabled people and those with long standing illnesses, many of whom are over 50.

New Deal (Young People)

Mr. Healey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many complaints have been made by New Deal clients on the 18–24 year old programme in each New Deal delivery unit (a) since 6 April 1998 for all areas and (b) since 1 January 1998 for the Pathfinder areas. [80903]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Information on the total number of complaints made by New Deal clients on the 18 to 24 year old programme is not held centrally. Under the Employment Service Jobseeker's Charter, New Deal clients are able to raise any complaints through a number of avenues such as the New Deal Hotline, which is available to both clients and employers for compliments and complaints. Hotline inquiries are collated centrally as per the following table, however, the majority of any complaints are dealt with at local level with the New Deal Personal Adviser. The level of satisfaction amongst young people participating on New Deal is one of the Core Performance Measures. Information about this will be published, by Unit of Delivery, later in the year.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to his answer of 23 March 1999, Official Report, column 196, how many times Ministers in his Department met their counterparts in the US Administration between 1 January 1998 and 1 June 1998, indicating the dates and locations of each meeting, the ministers involved and the name of the US counterpart. [80823]

Mr. Mudie: My right hon. Friends the Secretary of State and the Minister for Employment, Welfare to Work and Equal Opportunities met Alexis Herman at the G8 Employment Conference in London in February 1998.

No other such meetings took place between 1 January 1998 and 1 June 1998.

Departmental Personnel

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many personnel there are on the payroll of his Department currently; what is the annual cost of that payroll; and what were the comparable figures on 30 April 1997. [81084]

Mr. Mudie: I refer the hon. Member to Annexes E*i*, E*ii* and F of the Department's Report (Cm 4202) which is available in the Library.

The Report shows that there are currently 36,088 personnel on the Department's payroll (comprising DfEE HG and the Employment Service). The annual cost of that payroll is £831,004,000. Comparable figures for April 1997 are 41,910 personnel at an annual cost of £772,722,000.

Wirral Metropolitan College

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what are the arrangements for publication of the inspection report on Wirral Metropolitan College. [81209]

Mr. Mudie: The report is expected to be published on 27 April. Copies will be sent to all colleges, national and regional press, subscribers and the Local Education Authority and Training Enterprise Council. I have arranged for copies to be placed in the Library and it will also be available on the FEFC web site, the address of which is 'www.fefc.ac.uk'.

A copy is sent to the Member in whose constituency the main site of the college is located. However, I have asked in this case for copies to be sent to my hon. Friends the Members for Wirral, South (Mr. Chapman) and Wallasey (Angela Eagle).

FE College Principals (Retirement Packages)

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what information about the retirement packages of principals of FE colleges is made publicly available. [81211]

Mr. Mudie: Further education colleges are required to disclose in their annual financial statement the aggregate amount of any compensation paid to senior post holders for loss of office. College financial statements are public documents.

Drugs Misuse Education

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the training given to teachers for the delivery of drugs misuse education in schools. [80313]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Support for drug education teacher training is available to local education authorities through the Standards Fund. One of the requirements of Standards Fund provisions in this area is that local education authorities should submit at the end of the year a report of their drug education work, providing information on, amongst other things, the training of teachers and youth workers. This information allows us to monitor the level and quality of teacher training on drug education and was used to inform the guidance that we issued last November on the effective delivery of drug education in schools and youth service settings.

We have also given detailed consideration to information provided by the Office for Standards in Education (Ofsted) in its 1997 report "Drug Education in Schools", on the level and quality of in-service training of teachers relating to drug education.

DEFENCE

Special Advisers

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the total number of occasions when (a) departmental and (b) non-departmental special advisers have travelled abroad in an official capacity since 2 May 1997. [76834]

Mr. George Robertson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Mid-Norfolk (Mr. Simpson) on 31 March 1999, Official Report, columns 674–75.

Departmental Costs

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the cost to his Department in each of the last five years of evacuating British citizens from overseas trouble spots; which places were involved; and what was the cost for each. [80711]

Mr. Doug Henderson: In the last five years there have been three occasions where the military have evacuated British citizens from overseas trouble spots. The details are as follows:

May 1994—evacuation from Yemen. Central records for this operation, whose costs lay where they fell, were not kept in 1994.

June 1998—evacuation from Eritrea. The cost of the operation was estimated at around £50K.

December 1998—evacuation from Sierra Leone. The cost of the operation was estimated at around £150K.

Young Servicemen

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the roles which servicemen aged 16 and 17 are not eligible to perform, by service. [81238]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Service personnel who are on the trained strength are fully employable within the limits of their training, their rank or rating. Personnel aged under 17 are not deployed operationally, nor do they undertake operational patrols in Northern Ireland. Personnel aged under 18 are not deployed on UN peacekeeping operations in line with UN policy on the matter, although should a Royal Navy unit already serving overseas deploy at short notice on peacekeeping duties, it might contain a small number of personnel aged under 18.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many enlisted 16 and 17 year olds there are in each service. [81241]

Mr. Doug Henderson: At 1 March 1999, the numbers of 16 and 17 year old personnel serving in the UK Regular Armed Forces can be broken down as follows:

Age	Total	Naval Service	Army	Royal Air Force
16	1,559	253	1,235	71
17	5,069	776	3,914	379
Total	6,628	1,029	5,149	450

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on his policy towards the recruitment of under 18 year olds to the Armed Forces. [81239]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I refer the right hon. Member to the answer I gave to the right hon. Member for Caernarfon (Mr. Wigley) on 16 March 1999, Official Report, column 571.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many 16 and 17 year old servicemen are currently deployed overseas, by (i) service and (ii) theatre; and how many have been removed from their unit on its current deployment. [81236]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The details of Service personnel deployed overseas, by Service, are as follows:

Naval Service. No Royal Navy personnel aged 16 are presently deployed overseas. There are 53 Royal Navy personnel (including seven women) aged 17 deployed overseas with the Fleet. Their locations are as follows:

Adriatic: 21

Far East: 4

Gulf: 6

Mediterranean: 15

South Atlantic: 3

West Indies: 4.

There are no 16 or 17-year-old Royal Marine personnel serving overseas.

Army. As at 1 March 1999, no Army personnel aged 16 were deployed overseas. Some 133 personnel aged 17 were deployed overseas as follows:

Botswana: 1

Belize: 4

Canada: 2

Cyprus: 16

Gibraltar: 4

Kenya: 18

American Territories: 1

Germany: 56

USA: 9

Former Yugoslavia: 22

Royal Air Force. As at 1 March 1999, no Service personnel aged 16 were deployed overseas. One 17-year-old was serving in Saudi Arabia.

There is no record of personnel having been removed from their unit prior to its current deployment.

Kosovo

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the planned deployment of Territorial Army (i) units and (ii) individual personnel in Kosovo; and what reassessment he is making of the Strategic Defence Review following the engagement of British troops in the Balkans. [81251]

Mr. George Robertson: There are no plans to deploy units of the Territorial Army (TA) to Kosovo. Our policy is that TA commitments in the Balkans should continue to be met by individuals on a voluntary basis. The principles which underpin the Strategic Defence Review remain valid, and are not affected by the current deployment in the Balkans. However, full account will be taken of any lessons learned.

Wellington Barracks Electronic Range Simulator

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the reduction of access to Wellington Barracks Electronic Range Simulator. [81247]

Mr. Doug Henderson: There has been no change in the policy regarding access to the small arms trainer (SAT) at Wellington Barracks, although more units are using it now that the similar facility at Chelsea has been transferred to Hounslow. SAT operators from the resident battalion have been away on overseas training and this may have reduced access temporarily.

Military Training

Ms Julie Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the countries (a) from which police officers have visited the UK and (b) have been visited by United Kingdom military personnel to receive training or other military assistance under the Defence Military Assistance Fund since 1 April 1997. [81378]

Mr. Doug Henderson: From 6 to 13 December 1997, a member of the Export Support Team (Royal Engineers) visited the Royal Malaysian Police Bomb Disposal Unit to provide after sales training in equipment used in bomb disposal operations.

Emergency Rations

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the constituents of the emergency rations issued to Army personnel in the field. [81350]

Mr. Spellar: Personnel deployed in the field are normally fed using Operational Ration Packs when fresh food supply is not practicable or in the period before a fresh food supply chain can be established. The rations replicate normal feeding patterns by providing breakfast, lunch, dinner and snacks together with hot and cold drinks and are designed either for consumption under group feeding arrangements or for issue to the individual. There are currently seven menu variations. The ration packs can have up to 24 components, which vary depending on the ration type and the menu. The constituents range from ancillaries such as can openers and toilet tissue through snack items, such as biscuits and beverage sachets, to main meal items of meat and vegetables and a dessert.

War Pensions

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on progress on the review of the War Pensions Scheme. [81484]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The War Pensions Scheme is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security.

The MOD and DSS are currently reviewing arrangements for compensation service personnel or their bereaved where disablement or death is due to service in the Forces. The aim is to make proposals for a new compensation scheme that could replace the current War Pension Scheme and the attributable provisions of the Armed Forces Pension Scheme. The War Pension Scheme would, however, remain available for those who have already left the Armed Forces including current war pensioners.

We expect the review to report in the Summer. A separate review is being conducted into the main provision of the Armed Forces Pension Scheme, for which the Secretary of State for Defence is responsible. We expect recommendations to emerge around the end of this year.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library a copy of the United Kingdom submissions for the NATO fiftieth anniversary meeting to be held in Washington on 23 to 25 April; and if he will make a statement on the submissions made by (a) Germany and (b) Canada on the role of nuclear weapons within the NATO force structure. [81573]

Mr. George Robertson: The United Kingdom has played a full part in the confidential consideration between Allies of the various issues which will be discussed at the forthcoming NATO Summit. As is normal, the details of the UK contribution to such international negotiations are not made public and I am therefore withholding the information requested under Exemption 1 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information—defence, security and international relations.

The principles underlying the Government's approach have been set out in evidence given by me, my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, and senior officials to the Defence Select Committee's inquiry into the future of NATO, published on 13 April in the Committee's Third Report of Session 1998–99 (HC 39), as well as in debates and in answers to Questions in both Houses. I have also made a number of speeches, which are available on the Ministry of Defence's World Wide Web site, http:/www.mod/uk.

The views of other Allies on NATO issues are a matter for the Governments concerned.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will set out under which headings in his Departmental cash plans contained in Cm 4208, nuclear weapons (a) procurement, (b) deployment, (c) storage and (d) related maintenance activities are contained. [81499]

Mr. George Robertson: Costs relating to nuclear weapons procurement are contained in Vote 1 subheads K and L. Costs associated with the storage of nuclear weapons and related maintenance activities are contained in Vote 1 subhead F. Vote 1 subhead A covers the front line operating costs of the deterrent.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received recently from Abolition 2000 in respect of NATO's nuclear weapon policy and the NATO review meeting due to be held on 23 to 25 April in Washington DC. [81574]

Mr. George Robertson: Several officials in my Department have received copies of an identical letter, sent by Mr. Frank Blackaby of Abolition 2000 on 6 April 1999, concerning NATO nuclear policy and the review of the Alliance's Strategic Concept.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made by Russia and the United States in ratification of the Start II Nuclear Arms Control Treaty. [81478]

Mr. George Robertson: The United States Senate ratified START II on 26 January 1996. The Russian Duma has yet to do so.

Peacekeeping Policy

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent discussions he has had with other members of the European Union on developing a peacekeeping and crisis management policy. [81428]

Mr. George Robertson: In the context of the debate on further arrangements for European security and defence launched by the Prime Minister last autumn, European Union Member States have agreed to strengthen the Common Foreign and Security Policy, including through the development of a security and defence capacity. EU activities envisaged in this field are set out in the Amsterdam Treaty, and include humanitarian and rescue tasks and tasks of combat forces in crisis management, including peacemaking. I have had a variety of discussions with all EU partners, and NATO Allies on the means by which we might give effect to this.

NATO Summit

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the agenda for the forthcoming NATO summit on 24 to 25 April. [81490]

Mr. George Robertson: The scheduling of meetings, and the topics to be discussed at each one, during the NATO Summit, are still under consideration. Besides discussing the situation in the Balkans NATO's Heads of State and Government, Foreign and Defence Ministers, and colleagues from member countries of the Euro-Atlantic Partnership Council, will have a substantial range of issues to consider and important decisions will be taken on the continuing adaptation of NATO to meet the challenges of the future.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what weapons using depleted uranium have been sent with British military forces involved in the NATO military action against Yugoslavia; and what (a) depleted uranium shells and (b) other missiles using depleted shells have been used in the conflict. [81582]

Mr. George Robertson: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to my hon Friend the Member for Bristol, West (Valerie Davey) on 13 April 1999, Official Report, column 43.

Trident

Mrs. Gilroy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his latest estimate of the cost of the Trident Acquisition programme; and if he will make a statement. [81950]

Mr. George Robertson: The current estimate of the total acquisition cost of the Trident programme, with payments already made expressed at the prices and exchange rates actually incurred and future spend at the rates assumed in the latest long-term costing of the Defence programme (the hybrid estimate), is now £9,756 million. Leaving aside the effects of price inflation and exchange rate variation (+£21 million and -£1 million respectively), there has been a real cost reduction since last year of £52 million. Expenditure on the Trident acquisition programme to 30 September 1998 represented some 94 per cent. of this estimate. If all expenditure, past and projected, is brought up to the latest long-term costing conditions (the non-hybrid estimate) the estimate is £12,870 million.

Estimate table (hybrid)

	US	UK	Total

Estimate table (non-hybrid)

Revised Estimate at 1998–99 economic conditions (£1 = $1.6269)	3,448	9,423	12,870

Note:
Figures rounded to nearest £ million hence any apparent imbalances.

The programme also continues to show an overall reduction in real terms on its original 1982 estimate. This reduction, including the savings resulting from the decision to process missiles at the United States facility at Kings Bay, Georgia now stands at over £3.7 billion at current prices.

The proportion of the estimate for work undertaken in the United Kingdom is a little over 70 per cent.

Our three in-service Vanguard class submarines have successfully maintained a continuous at-sea deterrent. HMS Vengeance, the fourth of the class, was rolled out last September and is scheduled to enter operational service in two years' time.

Reserve Forces

Mr. Pound: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the future of the Territorial Auxiliary and Volunteer Reserve Associations. [81951]

Mr. Spellar: The future structure of the Territorial Auxiliary and Volunteer Reserve Associations (TAVRAs) has been the subject of a joint study involving the TAVRAs themselves and the Ministry of Defence. I have accepted the joint recommendation of the Commander in Chief Land Command and Chairman of the Council of TAVRAs, to set in hand new arrangements to ensure that the areas of responsibility of TAVRAs in England are aligned to those of Government office regions. Arrangements in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland will be unchanged. As a result, there will be a reduction in the number of Associations from the present 14 to 13. This reduction will be achieved by the amalgamation of the South East and Eastern Wessex Associations to form a new Association covering the counties of Kent, Sussex, Surrey, Hampshire and the Isle of Wight, Berkshire, Oxfordshire and Buckinghamshire. Responsibility for carrying out the Eastern Wessex Association's current functions in Dorset will transfer to the Western Wessex Association. This robust and coherent structure recognises the essential tri-Service nature of the TAVRAs, who provide an essential link between the community and the Armed Forces, whilst the changes to the financial arrangements that accompany it will promote a closer working partnership between the TAVRAs who administer the volunteer estate, and the Army's regional command structure, which will command Territorial Army units themselves.

The TAVRAs are established under the Reserve Forces Act of 1996, and these changes will be presented to the House in due course; we expect them to be complete by April 2002.

Defence Medical Services

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will set up a co-ordinating committee to oversee liaison between the National Health Service and Defence Medical Services. [80309]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Following the announcement by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence on 14 December 1998, Official Report, column 329, National Health Service representatives have been appointed to the two new senior management boards to ensure effective liaison between the Defence Medical Services and the National Health Service.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Crowd Recognition Devices

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures he is taking to restrict exports of crowd recognition devices for identifying individuals at rallies to countries identified as having limited human rights. [81041]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The Government do not control the export of crowd recognition devices for identifying individuals at rallies or other such events. If the hon. Member believes there is sufficient justification for the Government to consider the introduction of such a control, we would look at these arguments without prejudice to any decision.

Ministerial Meetings (US)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 2 March 1999, Official Report, column 684, how many times Ministers in his Department met their counterparts in the US Administration between 1 January 1998 and 1 June 1998, indicating the dates and locations of each meeting, the Ministers involved and the name of the US counterpart. [80817]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Foreign Office Ministers have frequent contact with members of the US Administration in the United States, in the UK and elsewhere overseas.

The Foreign Secretary visited Washington from 15–16 January 1998 and had formal meetings with Madeleine Albright, US Secretary of State, who was accompanied by Tom Pickering (Under Secretary for Political Affairs), Stuart Eizenstat (Under Secretary for Economics, Business and Agricultural Affairs), James Rubin (State Department Spokesman), Marc Grossman (Assistant Secretary for European and Canadian Affairs), Donald Bandler (Senior Director for European Affairs at the National Security Council), Anthony Wayne (Principal Deputy Assistant Secretary for European and Canadian Affairs), David Welch (Senior Deputy Assistant Secretary for Near Eastern Affairs); he also had talks with Sandy Berger, Assistant to the President for National Security Affairs. No other FCO Ministers visited the United States between 1 January 1998 and 1 June 1998.

As stated in my previous answer, the information the hon. Member requires on meetings which have taken place between FCO Ministers and their approximate US counterparts in the UK and third countries is not held centrally, and to obtain it would incur disproportionate costs.

Kosovo

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he had with the Secretary of State for International Development concerning the reception of refugees in Macedonia, Montenegro and Albania, before NATO's offensive on Yugoslavia. [80763]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Foreign Office Ministers and officials have remained in close contact with the Department for International Development and other Government Departments since the crisis in Kosovo began last year.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his Department's policy on a future role for the International Criminal Court in Kosovo following cessation of hostilities. [81250]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The International Criminal Court will not have jurisdiction over events occurring prior to its establishment. However, the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia (ICTY) is mandated to prosecute those responsible for serious violations of humanitarian law throughout the territory of the former Yugoslavia. We are doing all we can to assist the Tribunal with its investigations. It will be important that its staff are given full access to Kosovo once the military action is over so that they may conduct a thorough investigation into the atrocities that are allegedly occurring there.

Sierra Leone

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the report by the UN Observer Mission in Sierra Leone concerning alleged civil rights abuses by the Economic Community of West Africa States Monitoring Group; and what representations he has made on the report. [81242]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We fully support the efforts made by ECOMOG to protect the civilian population of Sierra Leone from rebel atrocities. Nevertheless, we view with concern any reports of abuses by ECOMOG forces, including those reported by the United Nations Observer Mission in Sierra Leone. We have made our views clear on this to ECOMOG and to the Government of Sierra Leone. The abuses described by UNOMSIL, and any other such reports, should be fully investigated.

We welcome the Nigerian Government's public commitment that ECOMOG will continue to operate in accordance with international humanitarian law and that it will take disciplinary measures against any offenders.

On 13 April 1999, Official Report, column 35, I gave details of the further assistance which we are providing to support ECOMOG's efforts to protect the people and the democratically elected Government of Sierra Leone. We have secured assurances from ECOMOG that this equipment will be used only in accordance with internationally acceptable human rights standards and humanitarian law. We have made it clear to ECOMOG that our support is conditional on ECOMOG and the Government of Sierra Leone respecting human rights.

Treaty of Amsterdam

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 31 March 1999, Official Report, column 692, on the Western European Union, on which dates the French and Greek Governments deposited instruments of ratification of the Treaty of Amsterdam; and on which day it will come into force. [81443]

Ms Quin: The Greek and French Governments deposited their instruments of ratification on 23 and 30 March 1999 respectively.

The Treaty of Amsterdam will enter into force on 1 May 1999.

Nuclear Disarmament

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment has been made of the proposals put forward by (a) South Africa, (b) Egypt, (c) Belgium, Germany, Italy, Netherlands and Norway, collectively, (d) Canada and (e) Group of 21 to the United Nations current Conference on Disarmament, in respect of nuclear disarmament; what support has been given by Britain to each proposal; and what proposals on nuclear disarmament have been submitted to the United Nations current Conference on Disarmament by the United Kingdom. [81569]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The highest priority for the Conference on Disarmament (CD) in 1999 is that negotiations on a fissile material cut-off treaty should begin in earnest. We therefore wish to see the re-establishment of the Ad Hoc Committee set up in 1998 for this purpose. Such a treaty is the internationally agreed next step towards nuclear disarmament.

Because the CD operates by consensus, the agreement of all participating countries on a work plan for the year must be obtained before substantive discussions can begin. We have therefore assessed all proposals made so far in the light of the prospects of their attracting such consensus support. Regrettably, none has yet done so. We will continue to press for a formula on which all can agree.

Gibraltar

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions have taken place with the Government of Gibraltar concerning the enfranchisement of Gibraltarians for European elections; and if he will make a statement. [81426]

Ms Quin [holding answer 20 April 1999]: We have kept the Government of Gibraltar fully informed at each stage of the steps we are taking to secure the EP vote for Gibraltarians. We tabled the text of our proposed amendment to the 1976 EC Act on Direct Elections in the General Affairs Group on 16 March. Our proposal is to add the words "and Gibraltar" to Annex II of the Act.

SCOTLAND

Residential Care Homes

Mr. Moore: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people in Scotland were in residential care homes in the most recent year for which figures are available aged (a) 60 to 64 years, (b) 65 to 74 years, (c) 75 to 84 years and (d) 85 years of age and over; and in each of those categories how many were funded by (i) the local authority on a means tested basis, (ii) the individuals themselves and (iii) the Department of Social Security through preserved rights. [77138]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 22 March 1999]: The numbers, by age, in residential care homes are given in Table A. The figures relate to 1996–97 and are provided by residential care homes on a statistical return to The Scottish Office.

Information on source of financial support is available only for residents in private and voluntary sector homes. The figures given in Table B relate to 1996–97 and are provided by residential care homes on a statistical return to The Scottish Office.

Table A: Number of people in residential care homes in Scotland by age (over 60 only) as at 31 March 1997

Age	Local authority run residential care homes	Private and voluntary run residential care homes	Total

Note:
The financial support of 531 residents aged 60 or over in private/voluntary run residential care homes is unknown.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Timber Industry

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what measures his Department has taken to stabilise the price of softwood timber in the UK; and if he will make a statement. [77206]

Mr. Macdonald [holding answer 23 March 1999]: None.

EU Grants

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many claims for the payment of (a) European Regional Development Fund and (b) Social Fund grants in Scotland dating from (i) before 1994, (ii) 1994, (iii) 1995, (iv) 1996, (v) 1997 and (vi) 1998 are still unpaid; and what is the total sum involved for each year. [79919]

Mr. Macdonald [holding answer 20 April 1999]: At 31 March 1999, the unpaid ERDF and ESF claims with my Department were as set out in the table:

	Number	Amount (£)
ERDF
Pre-1994	23	318,087
1994	5	275,768
1995	20	1,048,450
1996	66	908,310
1997	18	552,735
1998	268	8,513,577
1996	32	7,234,989
1997	48	5,465,446
1998	651	25,826,251

Of the ERDF claims, some 173 have been delayed because the claims are subject of queries, or where the applicants are due to refund payments or other grants to the Department, or where there are other technical reasons why the claims are currently invalid for payment. In addition, the 28 claims from pre-1994 and 1994 relate to old pre-1994 programmes which became liable for payment only in February of this year. They will of course be paid as soon as possible. Most of the unpaid ESF claims for 1996 and 1997 relate to Government sector training programmes final payments for which, in terms of the appropriate European Regulations, are not due until after 31 March 1999. The unpaid 1998 claims largely comprise final claims, which could be submitted only after 31 December 1998, and are currently being processed by the Department in the normal way.

From 1 July 1999, the administration of European Structural Funds will be the responsibility of the Scottish Administration.

Pharmacists' Remuneration

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what categories of expenditure are included under (a) general pharmaceutical services and (b) non-cash limited pharmacists' remuneration for the year 1999–2000. [80665]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 20 April 1999]: Pharmaceutical Services consist primarily of the supply of drugs and appliances prescribed by general practitioners. Reimbursements for drugs and appliances account for over 80 per cent. of the gross cost of the services. Fees to pharmacists and other dispensing practitioners make up most of the remainder. Income from prescription charges collected from patients is offset against these costs.

Non cash-limited pharmacists' remuneration comprises the fees paid to community pharmacists for dispensing prescriptions and most other pharmaceutical services. Some expenditure on locally managed pharmaceutical services is cash-limited.

In 1999–2000, expenditure on drugs and appliances is covered by Health Boards' cash-limited allocations. Health Boards do not receive a pre-determined allocation for non cash-limited expenditure.

Food and Agriculture Organisation

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his Department's contribution to the Food and Agriculture Organisation meeting in Rome; and if he will deposit ministerial speeches made in the forum in the Library. [80450]

Mr. Macdonald: Lord Sewel attended the Food and Agriculture Organisation's Ministerial meeting on forestry on 8 and 9 March. He reiterated the UK's commitment to sustainable forest management and outlined the measures we have implemented and are planning to implement on sustainable forestry. He also suggested steps that the international community should take, in preparation for the UN Commission on Sustainable Development next year, to promote sustainable management of forests throughout the world. I have arranged for a copy of Lord Sewel's statement to be placed in the Library along with a copy of the 'Rome Declaration on Forestry' which was adopted at the meeting.

Infectious Salmon Anaemia

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list up to the latest available date (a) each instance of Infectious Salmon Anaemia, (b) its location, (c) the date reported to his Department and (d) if in wild or farmed salmon, in seatrout or other salmonoid; and what measures he has taken, or is taking, to (i) control and (ii) eliminate the condition; and if he has determined how ISA was introduced to Scottish waters. [80872]

Mr. Macdonald: To date, Infectious Salmon Anaemia (ISA) has been confirmed on 10 seawater farmed salmon sites, as follows:

Site	Date of ISA confirmation
Loch Nevis B, Argyll	15 May 1998
Loch Greshornish, Skye	16 May 1998
Loch Nevis A, Argyll	9 June 1998
Loch Creran A, Argyll	9 June 1998
Loch Creran C, Argyll	9 June 1998
Loch Creran B, Argyll	17 June 1998
Shuna, Argyll	24 July 1998
Lismore A, Argyll	24 July 1998
Mangaster Voe, Shetland	27 August 1998
Loch Nevis C, Argyll	18 September 1998

Confirmation of the presence of ISA is based on clinical signs and laboratory tests. The current outbreak is the first in the European Community and legislation requires its elimination from our waters. The measures taken include clearance of the fish from infected farms, disinfection of equipment and fallowing for at least 6 months. In conjunction with official monitoring and sampling of fish, permission is required for movements of fish, equipment etc, into and out of farms in the same water catchment area as infected farms and fish movements are regulated in surrounding surveillance areas. An investigation into the source of the outbreak continues.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Arable Area Payment Scheme

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what will be the payment per hectare in sterling under the arable area payment scheme for (a) cereals, (b) set-aside, (c) pulses, (d) oilseed rape and (e) linseed for each year from 1999–2000 to 2005–06, using current exchange rates. [81371]

Mr. Macdonald: Using the rate of exchange with the euro which applied on 15 April 1999 (£0.6667/euro), payment rates under the Arable Area Payments Scheme in Scotland would be as follows:

(£/ha)

LFA
Cereals	188.75	203.79	218.83	218.83

Pulses	272.63	251.83	251.83	251.83
Oilseed rape	347.80	301.91	267.30	218.83
Linseed	365.06	306.57	262.70	218.83
Non-LFA
Cereals	205.42	221.78	238.15	238.15
Set-aside	260.19	221.78	238.15	238.15
Pulses	296.71	274.07	274.07	274.07
Oilseed rape	422.50	366.76	324.72	238.15
Linseed	397.30	333.64	285.89	238.15

The payment rates will be subject to the EU-prescribed penalties should there be a base area overshoot in the LFA or Non-LFA.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Fish Statistics

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the percentage of salmon and grilse caught by anglers in Scotland in each of the last 10 years which were caught by (a) persons permanently resident in Scotland and (b) anglers visiting Scotland. [81219]

Mr. Macdonald: The number of salmon and grilse caught in Scotland is set out in the table.

Number

Year	Salmon			Grilse	Salmon and Grilse	Sea trout
	January to April	May to December	Annual
1988	10,250	58,429	68,679	27,809	96,488	47,846

1997	4,580	27,440	32,020	17,757	49,777	27,742

Information on the residency of anglers is not available centrally.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the value to the Scottish economy of salmon farming in each of the last 10 years. [81217]

Mr. Macdonald: Annual production figures for the last 10 years are:

Year	Tonnes
1988	17,951
1989	28,553
1990	32,351
1991	40,593
1992	36,101
1993	48,691
1994	64,066
1995	70,060
1996	83,121
1997	99,197
1998	[1]115,483

[1] Estimate

Information on the value of annual production is not held centrally but a recently published study "The Economic Impact of Scottish Salmon Farming" estimated that in 1996 the turnover of salmon farmers was £248 million and of processors in Scotland £227 million. The study also estimated that the industry supported directly and indirectly 6,422 full time equivalent jobs. Copies of the study have been placed in the library.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Health Statistics

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what the incidence is of (a) leukaemia, (b) breast cancer,

(c) other forms of cancer and (d) foetal abnormalities amongst women (i) in Inverclyde and (ii) elsewhere in Scotland; and if he will make a statement. [81128]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 20 April 1999]: The information in regard to (a), (b) and (c) is set out in the following table:

Numbers of cases and incidence rates for women resident in Inverclyde Council area and the rest of Scotland in the period 1987–1996

	Area
	Inverclyde	Rest of Scotland
Breast cancer
Number of cases	522	29,817
Rate[2]	93.2	101.2
Leukaemia
Number of cases	40	2,371
Rate[2]	6.0	7.0
Other invasive neoplasms[1]
Number of cases	1,761	88,441
Rate[2]	273.5	257.5

[1] Excludes non-melanoma skin cancer

[2] European age-standardised rate per 100,000

The information available on foetal abnormalities relates to births and therapeutic abortions where the condition of the foetus was recorded, excluding pregnancies ending in miscarriage. On this basis, in the year ending March 1998 there were 23 pregnancies in Inverclyde Council area and 3,035 pregnancies in the Rest of Scotland where a congenital anomaly was recorded. These figures imply rates of 126.7 and 281.7 respectively, per 100,000 population of women between 15 and 44.From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

HIV

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 23 February 1999, Official Report, columns 222–24, if he will set out for each group of people tested, whether (a) their consent was sought for entry and (b) they were informed that they were to be entered into an anonymised HIV prevalence survey. [80714]

Mr. Galbraith [holding answer 20 April 1999]: The programme of unlinked anonymous HIV testing was introduced in the UK in 1989, in accordance with World Health Organisation international guidelines for its global programme on AIDS, on the basis that specific informed consent is not required. However, in clinical settings where such testing is undertaken, this should be made clear to attenders by the use of posters and leaflets, which should also indicate that any person not wishing to have their sample tested in this way may refuse permission. Appropriate posters and leaflets are provided in antenatal care settings and in genito-urinary medicine clinics.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Kosovo Refugees

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will estimate the number of refugees who have fled Kosovo in the past three weeks; and if she will make a statement. [80924]

Clare Short: According to the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees over 660,000 people have left Kosovo in the last three weeks. Of these, 359,000 have found refuge in Albania, over 132,000 in Macedonia, 73,000 in Montenegro and over 32,000 in Bosnia. Over 15,000 of the refugees have been taken to countries outside the region including Turkey, Germany and Norway. And according to unconfirmed reports, some 50,000 people have moved from Kosovo to Serbia.

Balkan Aid

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the additional British aid given to Albania and the former Yugoslavia as a result of the current Kosovo crisis; and if she will make a statement. [80926]

Clare Short: The British Government have committed an additional £20 million since 24 March for humanitarian action in response to the current crisis in Kosovo. Most of this funding is being used to help the Kosovo refugees in Albania and the Former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia and Montenegro. A briefing note giving further details of the assistance provided by the Department for International Development has been deposited in the Library of the House.

Cambodia

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development (1) if she will list the main expenditure items in respect of aid to Cambodia for 1998–99; [80887]

(2) what is the estimated UK aid expenditure on Cambodia for (a) 1998–99 and (b) 1999–2000. [80885]

Clare Short: The estimated expenditure in Cambodia for 1998–99 is £7 million. This is in support of a programme in health, education, urban poverty, rehabilitation, humanitarian de-mining, elections and the programmes of international non-governmental organisations. Planned expenditure for 1999–2000 is £5 million. A Country Strategy Paper for Cambodia is being developed and will be published later this year.

Ministerial Meetings (US)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development, pursuant to her answer of 17 March 1999, Official Report, column 671, on meetings with US counterparts, if she will list the dates and locations of her meetings with the head of USAID since 1 November 1998. [80818]

Clare Short: Since 1 November 1998 to date, I have had no meetings with the head of USAID although I have spoken to him on the telephone.

Professional Statisticians

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many staff who have worked as professional statisticians in her Department and its predecessor have left on early retirement in each of the past 10 years. [81176]

Clare Short: One professional statistician left on early retirement in 1997.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many staff by grade are employed as professional statisticians in her Department; how many of these staff have been accepted as fast stream by the Civil Service Selection Board; and how many have been granted chartered statistician status by the Royal Statistical Society. [81198]

Clare Short: My Department has 13 professional statisticians, in the following grades:

Grade	Number
Chief Statistician (Senior Civil Service)	1
Senior Statistician (former Grade 6)	1
Statistician (former Grade 7)	9
Temporary Assistant Statistician	2

Eleven have passed the Civil Service Selection Board and 2 hold chartered status with the Royal Statistical Society

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Special Advisers

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the total number of occasions when (a) departmental and (b) non-departmental special advisers have travelled abroad in an official capacity since 2 May 1997. [76832]

Mr. Chris Smith: Between 2 May 1997 and 28 February 1999, my Special Advisers have made visits on four occasions in an official capacity. All travel complied with the requirements of the Ministerial Code and the Civil Service Management Code.

Millennium Dome (Sponsorship)

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how much of the sponsorship secured for the Dome takes the form of cash payments (a) for construction work and (b) for other purposes; and what is the estimated value of gifts in kind. [78378]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 23 March 1999]: Each of the arrangements with individual sponsors differs in terms of the level of support for exhibit zones; associated National Programme activities and other aspects of the Millennium Experience. There is no direct correlation between the source of income and payment of invoices for particular aspects of the project. NMEC has been successful in achieving the majority of its sponsorship income target.

NMEC are currently preparing their accounts for the 1998–99 financial year for audit. To publish unaudited accounts would leave them open to misinterpretation. NMEC's audited accounts for 1998–99, which will differentiate between the cash and value-in-kind components of sponsorship, will be published in due course. NMEC does not accept gifts in kind.

British Open Squash Championship

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what representations he has received concerning the cancellation of the British Open Squash Championship 1999. [81345]

Mr. Banks: I have not received any representations concerning the cancellation of the British Open Squash Championship 1999 which was due to be held in March. The Sports Councils are working closely with the Squash Rackets Association, the event organisers, who are hopeful of staging the event in November of this year at a venue yet to be confirmed.

World Tourism Organisation

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment he has made of the benefits of the United Kingdom becoming a member of the World Tourism Organisation. [81401]

Janet Anderson: My Department consulted other relevant Government Departments and the British Tourist Authority last year about the advantages of joining the World Tourism Organisation. We concluded that UK membership would not represent best use of the money available to support tourism.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Failed Asylum Seekers

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current size of the backlog of failed asylum seekers liable for removal; and by when he expects that backlog to be cleared. [78664]

Mr. Mike O'Brien [holding answer 29 March 1999]: As at November 1998, the latest date for which a figure is available, the estimated backlog of failed asylum seekers liable for removal was 24,000. That figure represents a snapshot, taken from Immigration and Nationality Directorate port and enforcement databases, of failed asylum seekers, excluding dependants, who have exhausted their rights of appeal (including any who did not submit an appeal against the refusal of asylum) and who are liable for removal.

The backlog figure includes a number of cases where there are one or more barriers to removal such as absconding, judicial review or lack of documentation. Therefore, it is unlikely ever to be the case that the whole of the backlog will be cleared. In light of the unpredictable influence that legal and other barriers exert on the removal process, it is not possible to provide a reliable estimate of when the backlog is likely to be cleared. However, we made clear in the Immigration and Asylum White Paper our commitment to strengthen enforcement of immigration controls. We have already taken a number of steps to deliver that commitment and further measures are included in the Immigration and Asylum Bill.

Some 12,500 failed asylum seekers were removed or departed voluntarily between May 1997 and February 1999. This number is greater than the combined annual totals for 1993 to 1996.

Deportation Orders

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many deportation orders were (a) signed and (b) enforced in each of the last three years for which figures are available. [78636]

Mr. Mike O'Brien [holding answer 29 March 1999]: The information requested is given in the table. It should be noted that some deportation orders may not be immediately executable because of legal reasons, or other barriers to removal such as absconding, and that in some cases where a deportation order has been signed, it is later decided that deportation is no longer appropriate. The Government will further reduce the use of Deportation Orders under the Immigration and Asylum Bill by increasing the use of administrative removal.

	Deportation orders signed	Deportation orders enforced [2]
1996	1,880	900
1997	1,200	820
1998[1]	980	690

[1] 1998 data are provisional

[2] A deportation order enforced in one year may have been signed in an earlier year. It should be noted that some deportation orders may not be immediately executable because of legal reasons, or other barriers to removal such as absconding, and that in some cases where a deportation order has been signed it is later decided that deportation is no longer appropriate.

Note:

All figures are rounded to the nearest 10.

Methylamphetamine

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many seizures of methylamphetamine have been made by (a) police and (b) HM Customs, in the last 10 years; and what was the total quantity seized. [79902]

Mr. George Howarth: Figures for the number of seizures of methylamphetamine made by the police and Customs and submitted to the Forensic Science Service for analysis between 1995 and 1998 are given in the table. It should be noted that full information is not available for 1996 and 1997. Equivalent figures for earlier years can be provided only at disproportionate cost. Not all seizures of controlled drugs are necessarily submitted for analysis. Details of all seizures, whether analysed or not, can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Until late 1997, methylamphetamine represented less than 0.1 per cent. of all amphetamine cases in the United Kingdom. Furthermore, the amounts seized (mostly white powders) were generally small with typical purities of less than 10 per cent. The weight of tablets varies but is typically in the range 250–300 milligrams and perhaps has a drug content of 5 per cent.

Use of this substance is very rare in Europe but is more prevalent in the United States of America and Japan.

Heroin and Cocaine

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the proportion of (a) heroin and (b) cocaine seized in the last 12 months for which figures are available, with a degree of purity of (i) less than 20 per cent., (ii) 20 to 30 per cent., (iii) 30 to 40 per cent., (iv) 40 to 50 per cent., (v) 50 to 60 per cent. and (vi) 60 per cent. and above; and what quantity was seized in each band. [79898]

Mr. George Howarth: Figures for the purity of heroin and cocaine submitted for analysis to the Forensic Science Service in 1997, the last year for which data are available, are given in the tables. The figures have been broken down by type of enforcement agency since the amounts seized in each purity band are only readily available for Customs. Further information can be provided only at disproportionate cost. It should be noted that only a small proportion of drugs seized are submitted for forensic analysis.

Animal Procedures Committee

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list the medically qualified members of the Animal Procedures Committee over the last 12 years; [80765]

(2) what plans he has to appoint more medically qualified members to the Animal Procedures Committee. [80764]

Mr. George Howarth: We last made new appointments to the Animal Procedures Committee in December 1998 and have no immediate plans to appoint further new members. Under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986, members of the Committee can serve for a maximum of two terms, each of up to four years.

The past and present members of the Animal Procedures Committee over the last 12 years who have held a medical qualification are Mr. J. C. Brice, Professor B. Bridges, Professor A. D. Dyan, Professor S. M. Jennet, Dr. J. G. G. Ledingham, Professor J. F. Martin, and Professor T. R. E. Pilkington.

Professional Statisticians

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many staff by grade are employed as professional statisticians in his Department; how many of these staff have been accepted as fast stream by the Civil Service Selection Board; and how many have been granted chartered statistician status by the Royal Statistical Society; [81205]

(2) how many staff who have worked as professional statisticians in his Department have left on early retirement in each of the past 10 years. [81185]

Mr. Straw: Statistical work is undertaken by a range of specialisms such as Research Officers, Scientific Officers and Economists. The following numbers of staff are currently employed by the Home Office after having been recruited as fast stream professional statisticians by the Civil Service Selection Board.

Senior Civil Service: 3

Grade 6: 3

Grade 7: 16

Assistant Statistician: 7.

In addition, five Statistical Officers are employed in the Executive Officer grade.

Information on the numbers granted chartered statistician status by the Royal Statistical Society is not available.

The numbers who left on early retirement were:

one in 1996

one in 1998.

EU Justice and Home Affairs Council

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what factors underlay the length of time between the meeting of the Justice and Home Affairs Council on 12 March and his report to the House. [81240]

Kate Hoey: The report was made to the House at the earliest practicable opportunity.

Criminal Justice Act 1993

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the provisions of Part I of the Criminal Justice Act 1993 will come into force. [81939]

Mr. Straw: Part I of the Criminal Justice Act 1993 extends the jurisdiction of the courts in England and Wales over offences of fraud. A Commencement Order was made on 19 April 1999 to bring the provisions of Part I into force on 1 June 1999. Copies of the Commencement Order have been placed in the Library. Similarly jurisdiction to that conferred in Part I already exists in the common law in Scotland, and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland is making similar provision for Northern Ireland.

Local Government Elections

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will (a) provide for all candidates in local elections free post for election addresses, (b) have the same polling times for local elections as for parliamentary elections and (c) review the guidance given to the media so that the names of candidates in local elections, who are members of local councils, can be given when they are making important statements on behalf of their local authorities. [81130]

Mr. George Howarth: On (a), the Government have no plans to do so at this time. On (b), the Working Party on Electoral Procedures, which I chair, recommended in its interim report of July 1998 that provision should be made in legislation to enable the Home Secretary to approve pilot schemes to explore alternative electoral procedures. Such schemes might include increasing the hours of polling at local elections in line with those at parliamentary elections. On (c), the Government are currently considering, in consultation with the broadcasters and political parties, the provisions in section 93 of the Representation of the People Act 1983 which govern participation in broadcasts by candidates at local and parliamentary elections.

Firearms

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many legally registered firearms have been (a) reported stolen, (b) found to be missing and (c) otherwise separated from (i) private and (ii) public owners in each of the last 10 years; and what percentage that represents of the total number of legally held weapons. [81134]

Mr. Boateng: The information is not available in the form requested. However, figures for the misappropriation of firearms are published annually in Chapter 3 of "Criminal Statistics: England and Wales", copies of which are in the Library.

"Misappropriation" in this context covers firearms stolen, obtained by fraud or forgery, or handled dishonestly but not accidental loss, for which the Home Office does not maintain records. Before 1995, the figures for the misappropriation of firearms were for the number of incidents. A single incident could relate to more than one firearm. From 1995, figures record the number of actual firearms reported as having been misappropriated. The figures cover all firearms including those that do not need to be held on certificate. Details of ownership are not recorded. The totals for each of the last ten years for which figures for England and Wales are available are given in the table.

	Misappropriation of firearms
1988	1,875
1989	1,821
1990	2,089
1991	2,500
1992	2,750
1993	3,190
1994	2,830
1995	3,915
1996	3,679
1997	2,912

Prior to 1995, only estimates of the number of firearms and shotguns held on certificate were recorded centrally. Although details of actual numbers were subsequently recorded, comparing the figures for misappropriated firearms for the last three years against the total number of firearms held on certificate in those years does not provide a reliable estimate of the proportion of lawfully owned firearms that are misappropriated every year. The former figures include firearms that need not be held on certificate (eg air weapons, starting guns and imitation firearms) whilst the latter figures do not cover all lawfully owned firearms (eg they do not cover firearms held by registered dealers, those held by the Crown or those that do not require a certificate). Subject to those significant caveats, the figures given in the table provide a very rough estimate of the proportion of lawfully owned firearms in England and Wales which have been misappropriated since 1995.

	Number of firearms on certificate	Number of firearms misappropriated	Percentage
1995	1,739,400	3,915	0.225
1996	1,753,300	3,679	0.210
1997	1,648,900	2,912	0.177

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the types of (i) public and (ii) private institution falling within his area of responsibility in which individuals aged under 18 years may be trained in the use of firearms; and if he will estimate the numbers of individuals receiving such training in each type of institution in each of the last five years. [81135]

Mr. Straw: There are currently a total of 113 target shooting clubs at schools in England and Wales which have been approved by the Home Office under the terms of section 15 of the Firearms (Amendment) Act 1988. All approved clubs are expected to have at least ten members but no record is kept centrally of the number of members at any one time. Nor is any record kept by the Department as to which of these are state and which are private schools.

The Home Office is also responsible for the approval of target shooting clubs other than those based at schools. There are 1,314 clubs approved in England and Wales many of which will have younger members under the age of 18.

Prior to the passage of the Armed Forces Act 1996, the Home Office was responsible for the approval of cadet corps based at schools, colleges and universities. In 1996, there were 600 such corps, of which approximately half were based at schools and likely therefore to have members under 18. The number of individual cadet members at that time is not recorded.

It is not possible on the basis of the information kept to provide an estimate as requested of how many young people have been trained in the use of firearms over the last five years.

Volunteer Vetting (Charges)

Mr. Walter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the level of the charge to the Scout Association for use of the Criminal Records Bureau for the purpose of vetting volunteers; and what plans he has to review those charges. [81623]

Mr. Boateng: I have not made an estimate of any additional costs which might accrue to the Scout movement as a result of checks which may be carried out with the Criminal Records Bureau. I understand that the Scout Association has estimated that additional costs of £750,000 per year will accrue to it, but I have no knowledge of the basis on which it has reached this estimate.

TREASURY

Environmental Appraisals

Mr. Truswell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what environmental appraisals of policy his Department has (a) completed, (b) started and (c) planned. [79624]

Ms Hewitt: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to him by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, my hon. Friend the Member for Mansfield (Mr. Meale), on 13 April 1999, Official Report, column 66.

Legal Aid (Foreign Workers)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which officials in his Department had discussions with representatives of GJW, and on how many occasions and on what dates concerning the wish by Cape plc to amend the Access to Justice Bill [Lords] to ban foreign workers of British companies obtaining legal aid; and whether the statement of the Head of legal aid spending in his Department that the implication of such a multiple claim by foreign nationals on the public purse would be a matter of serious concern was made with the knowledge of Ministers. [78746]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 31 March 1999]: There have been no such discussions, and no such statement was made.

Road Fund Gas Duty

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the cost of reducing the level of duty on road fuel gas to (a) eight pence per kilogram and (b) zero. [80016]

Ms Hewitt: Although the revenue from duty on road fuel gas is currently small, cutting the duty rate to either (a) 8p per kilogram, consistent with the EU minimum rate, or (b) zero would result in switching from other road fuels, which could have a significant revenue cost. Because the extent of such switching is uncertain, it is not possible to provide a precise estimate.

National Insurance Numbers

Mr. Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of National Insurance numbers are found on routine inspection to be bogus. [81036]

Dawn Primarolo: It is not known what proportion of National Insurance Numbers (NINOs) are found to be bogus on routine inspection.

The DSS has identified 5,312 NINOs which have been flagged on the Departmental Central index and can no longer be used.

Mr. Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress has been made on developing methods of cross-checking records within the National Insurance Recording System. [81091]

Dawn Primarolo: A person to person link to cross-reference husband and wife is a feature of NIRS2.

Data matching exercises have been used to cross check the validity of National Insurance numbers on NIRs.

A number of pilot exercises have been constructed to cross check details of NI accounts on NIRS. Each of these exercises has contributed to the intelligence needed to establish rules for identifying anomalous NI accounts.

The Benefits Agency presently matches the information on forms P46 completed when an individual starts work. This information is matched against the various DSS benefit systems to identify potential incorrectness.

ISAs (Advertising)

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the amount spent and to be spent in (a) 1998–99 and (b) 1999–2000 on advertising individual savings account by (i) the National Savings bank, (ii) the Inland Revenue and (iii) other Government Departments and agencies. [80867]

Ms Hewitt: The amounts requested are as follows. The Inland Revenue figures relate to a general awareness campaign for ISAs which was conducted in March and April 1999. National Savings figures relate to the launch of a National Savings ISA product. No Government Department or agency other than the Inland Revenue and National Savings is involved in promoting ISAs.

	1998–99	1999–2000 [3]
Inland Revenue[1]	993,422.64	nil
National Savings[2]	1,445,640	3,052,000

[1] Includes agency fees, production and research costs and the cost of purchasing space in newspapers.
[2] Includes space, airtime, printing and postage costs only. ISA advertising forms part of a larger National Savings rebranding campaign and it is not possible to isolate agency fees and production costs for the ISA component of the campaign with any precision.
[3] Estimated.

Red Book

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will define the expression "poor literacy skills", used in paragraph 1.12 of the Red Book; and if he will provide comparable figures for (a) 1995, (b) 1996, (c) 1997 and (d) 1998. [80850]

Dawn Primarolo: Over 1994–95, twelve countries took part in an International Adult Literacy Survey. The ranges of scores achieved by representative samples of each population aged 16 to 65 were grouped into five proficiency levels, of which level 1 indicated people with very poor literacy skills.

Within the UK sample, 21.8 per cent. achieved only level 1 in prose literacy, which was defined as the knowledge and skills needed to understand and use information from printed texts, whereas the proportion of the German sample at this level was 14.4 per cent.

There are no comparable figures for later years.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the civil servants who reviewed the Red Book to ensure its objectivity; and if he will publish the guidelines on which such judgments are made. [80888]

Dawn Primarolo: The Red Book is a Government document approved by Ministers under the 'Guidance on the Work of the Government Information Service' issued by the Cabinet Office.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the new opportunities referred to in paragraph 1.22 of the Red Book. [80854]

Dawn Primarolo: The Government's aim is to ensure that every family and child has the opportunity to fulfil their potential by tackling the causes of inequality of opportunity. It is promoting employment opportunity for parents through the New Deals and by making work pay. This will reduce worklessness, a major cause of childhood disadvantage. It is also investing in early years learning and education to ensure that every child will have the chance to succeed in later life.

Tax and Spending Leaflet

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the costs of (a) printing and (b) postage of sending a leaflet to every household informing them of tax and spending decisions. [80856]

Dawn Primarolo: The approximate cost of the household leaflet is around £1.5 million but the exact cost will depend on a number of factors, including the way in which it is distributed and the number of households receiving a copy. The cost will be firmed up in the run up to Budget 2000. Any expenditure will be met within the existing spending totals.

Euro

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the annual cost of accepting the payment of taxes in euros. [80669]

Ms Hewitt: Annual costs of accepting tax payments in euro will depend on the level of take-up but recurrent costs are likely to be marginal.

VAT

Charlotte Atkins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the rules relating to the exemption of children's clothes and shoes from VAT were (a) introduced and (b) last revised. [81384]

Dawn Primarolo: The rules relating to the zero-rating of children's clothing and shoes were introduced on 1 April 1973, and were last revised with effect from 1 April 1994.

Census Returns

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the hon. Members to whom, since 1 October 1998, his Department or the Office for National

Statistics have provided information about restrictions on public access to the census returns for 1921, 1951 and 1961, indicating what information was provided. [81565]

Ms Hewitt: Responses to several hon. Members have been given since 1 October 1998 on matters relating to the restricted access to closed census returns in England and Wales, only two of which were in response to inquiries referring specifically to censuses for the period since 1911. In each case the response given set out the Government's view that, whilst they recognise the sociological value of historical census records, it considers that the strict confidentiality assurances given about present and future censuses would be seriously compromised if it were seen to be departing from the assurances given about censuses in the past.

In the White Paper on the 2001 Census, published on 4 March, the Government confirmed that they have no plans to revise legislation relating to the period of closure of census returns.

Departmental Running Costs

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list gross departmental running costs limits for 1999–2000. [81938]

Mr. Milburn: The gross running costs limit for each Government Department is shown in the table. This table replaces table 3.2 of the Public Expenditure Statistical Analyses 1999–2000 (Cm 4201) which contained some errors.

SOCIAL SECURITY

National Insurance Computer

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects the backlog of claims arising from the failure of the national insurance computer system to be cleared and arrears payments and compensation payments to be made; and if he will make a statement. [80290]

Mr. Darling [holding answer 14 April 1999]: In my written answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Clwyd, West (Mr. Thomas) on 15 March 1999, Official Report, columns 486–88, I updated the House about progress that the Benefits and Contributions Agencies had made in addressing outstanding issues relating to the introduction of the new National Insurance Recording System (NIRS2).

From 1 April, when the Contributions Agency transferred to the Inland Revenue, joint arrangements have been in place to manage the NIRS2 programme. The Stabilisation and Recovery plans for 1999–2000, which include plans for reviewing the backlogs in the Benefits Agency, are currently being finalised.

Good progress has been made over the last month and I am pleased to announce that arrangements are in hand to pay compensation at a flat rate of £10 to claimants who have suffered an unreasonable delay as announced on 1 February 1999.

Payments to Pensioners and Widows will be issued automatically at the end of April. Claimants who are in receipt of Incapacity Benefit and those Widows and Pensioners whose claims are handled clerically will be paid their £10 when their case is reviewed and compensation under the normal rules will also be considered. Claimants will not need to make a claim for this payment.

I am also pleased to announce that the Benefits Agency will begin to review the backlog of initial and emergency awards of benefit this week. Where a claimant has been underpaid, any arrears of benefit due will be paid and, if entitlement to compensation under the Department Special Payments scheme exceeds the £10 already paid, cases will be identified. These payments of compensation will be handled centrally. Additional staff have been allocated to this task and the standard process has been streamlined to ensure payments of compensation are issued as quickly as possible following the review of benefit.

It is planned that he Benefits Agency's review of cases will be completed in six months.

It is expected that from the end of April information from NIRS2 will be used to process Retirement Pension forecast applications. This is the final benefit process to migrate from the NIRS1 to the NIRS2 system.

Winter Allowance

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security for what reason the £100 winter allowance will not be paid through the basic state pension; and what is the additional cost of paying it separately. [80853]

Angela Eagle: We are committed to alleviating fuel poverty amongst the elderly of this country, and to enabling all pensioners to share in its increasing prosperity. To help meet these objectives we have increased the Winter Fuel Payment fivefold for eligible pensioner households. It is also why, for this coming winter, we will make all payments before Christmas.

Paying the Winter Fuel Payment through the same vehicle as Retirement Pension would not be straightforward. This is because they are designed to serve different purposes. The Winter Fuel Payment is intended to help each eligible household with the cost of its fuel bills. In order to do so, it takes into account household composition to provide an overall payment of £100 to each eligible household, rather than each individual pensioner within it. Retirement Pension is designed to provide each individual pensioner with regular income. In order to do this, payments are based only on individual entitlements, regardless of household circumstances.

Severe Disablement Allowance

Ms Jenny Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people were receiving severe disablement allowance in (a) the UK and (b) the West Midlands on 31 March. [81163]

Mr. Bayley: Information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the table. Figures for 31 March 1999 are not yet available.

Severe disablement allowance recipients

	31 August 1998
United Kingdom	385,412
Northern Ireland	15,612
Great Britain	369,800
West Midlands	31,840

Note:
Both systems exclude a small number of cases [illegible] clerically.
Sources:
Northern Ireland: 100 per cent. sample of the Benefit computer system.
Great Britain and West Midlands: 5 per cent. sample of the benefit computer system.

Pensioners

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioners with no private income there were in each local authority area in Wales in each of the past 10 years. [81340]

Mr. Timms: The information requested is not available at local authority district level.

Annuity Rates

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proposals he has to require annuity rates to be equalised between men and women. [81370]

Mr. Timms: There is already a requirement to purchase a unisex annuity in respect of any protected rights in occupational and personal pensions.

To extend this further could have effects on the annuity market and those possible effects would have to be examined carefully before making any changes to the existing requirement.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

CAP

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish the calculations he made following the recent agreement by European Union Agriculture Ministers on CAP reform to determine the saving on consumers' food bills which will result when its latest reforms are fully implemented. [79776]

Mr. Rooker: As a result of the agreement reached by heads of government in Berlin, our calculations suggest that the benefits to UK consumers from the implementation of the cuts in support prices could be £1 billion a year once the reform has been fully implemented, and provided that all the likely reduction in farm-gate prices are passed through to retail level. A note explaining the basis for the calculation has been placed in the Library.

River Derwent (Flooding)

Mr. Greenway: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will commission a public inquiry into events surrounding the recent flooding of the River Derwent in North and East Yorkshire. [80270]

Mr. Morley: In the light of a report I have received from the Environment Agency on the events surrounding the flooding, I am not persuaded that a public inquiry into this event is justified. I shall write to the hon. Member about the Agency's report.

Arable Area Payments Scheme

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what will be the payment per hectare in sterling under the arable area payments scheme for (a) cereals, (b) set-aside, (c) pulses, (d) oilseed rape and (e) linseed for each year from 1999–2000 to 2005–06, using current exchange rates. [81372]

Mr. Rooker: Using the rate of exchange with the euro which applied on 15 April 1999 (£0.6667/euro), payment rates under the Arable Area Payments Scheme in England are as follows:

£/ha

	1999–2000	2000–01	2001–02	2002–03 onwards
Cereals	213.38	230.39	247.39	247.39
Set-aside	270.28	230.39	247.39	247.39
Pulses	308.22	284.70	284.70	284.70
Oilseed rape	377.18	327.30	289.78	247.39
Linseed	412.71	346.58	296.98	247.39

The payment rates for oilseed rape and linseed in 2000–01 and 2001–02 are subject to confirmation in the legal texts implementing the recent CAP reform agreement. Payments on oilseeds in 1999–2000 will be subject to adjustment in line with the observed EU reference price. Payments on oilseeds from 1999–2000 to 2001–02 inclusive will also be subject to any penalties applied when the EU Maximum Guaranteed Area is exceeded.

These figures exclude any compensation which may be available under EU regulations in respect of currency fluctuations.

Genetically Modified Crops

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has discussed with representatives of the biotechnology industry the introduction of a voluntary three-year halt in the planting of herbicide tolerant genetically modified crops. [77683]

Mr. Nick Brown [holding answer 19 March 1999]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment on 19 March 1999, Official Report, columns 879–80.

Genetically Modified Organisms

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which of his responsibilities in respect of genetically modified organisms will be devolved to (a) the Scottish Parliament and (b) the National Assembly for Wales. [81460]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 20 April 1999]: Food and environmental safety will be devolved policy areas. However, all activities involving genetically modified organisms are governed by European legislation, and, in order to promote a coherent UK framework for handling these matters, administrative concordats are being developed between the relevant Whitehall Departments and the devolved executives.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Senator Pinochet

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Attorney-General for what reason a representative of the Crown Prosecution Service was in Madrid prior to the issue of a final warrant for the arrest of Senator Pinochet; if he will list that official's meetings in Madrid; and if he will make a statement. [81225]

The Solicitor-General: Warrants for the arrest of Senator Pinochet have been issued by the Bow Street Magistrates' Court on 16 October 1998 (the first arrest warrant), 22 October 1998 (the second arrest warrant) and on 15 April 1999 (the third arrest warrant).

A lawyer from the Crown Prosecution Service, accompanied by counsel instructed by the CPS on behalf of the Kingdom of Spain, has visited Madrid in connection with the proceedings against Senator Pinochet on three occasions. The first occasion was on 22 and 23 October 1998. The second occasion was on 22 and 23 December 1998. And the third occasion was on 6 and 7 April 1999.

Before, during and after visiting Madrid there has been telephone contact between the CPS and counsel and Judge Baltasar Garzon Real.

During visits to Madrid the CPS lawyer and counsel have attended meetings with Judge Baltasar Garzon Real and also meetings chaired by Judge Baltasar Garzon Real at which representatives of the Spanish interested parties have been present. These have included Dr. Juan Garces, Enrique de Santiago, Carlos Slepoy and Virginia Dias. Additionally, secretaries, assistants and interpreters have been present at meetings.

During the first visit the CPS lawyer and counsel met the acting British Ambassador prior to meeting the Spanish authorities.

The CPS lawyer and counsel have attended in Madrid to receive instructions from Judge Baltasar Garzon Real, to inspect documentation and to advise on the extradition proceedings.

Throughout the extradition proceedings the Crown Prosecution Service has been acting as agent for the Kingdom of Spain in its capacity as a private lawyer acting for a foreign client and not that of prosecutor, as has been recognised by the Divisional Court. It would not therefore be appropriate to detail the contents of the meetings held in Madrid. The matters raised touch on client-solicitor confidentiality and are for resolving through the judicial process.

PRIME MINISTER

Proportional Representation

Q15. Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on proportional representation for Westminster parliamentary elections. [80336]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Pendle (Mr. Prentice) on 14 April 1999, Official Report, column 238.

KLA

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what assessment he has made of (a) the Europol report to European interior and justice Ministers on a connection between the KLA and Albanian drugs gangs and (b) the German Federal Police Agency report on KLA involvement in heroin trafficking for the acquisition of arms. [81418]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 19 April 1999]: There has been no such report from Europol to European Justice and Home Affairs Ministers. I understand also that the German Federal Police Agency have stated that they have not prepared any such report.

Gibraltar

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the outcome of his summit discussions with the Spanish Prime Minister in relation to Gibraltar during the weekend of 10 and 11 April. [81577]

The Prime Minister: The Summit provided an opportunity to mark and formalise the step-change in our wider relationship with Spain, an EU partner with whom we have many common interests. I did discuss Gibraltar with Sr. Aznar. I set out, as I have before, British policy on Gibraltar. I also expressed our wish to see improved relations between Britain and Spain lead to material improvements in relation to Gibraltar.

Ministerial Committees (European Policy)

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the membership and terms of reference of all ministerial committees dealing with European policy. [81432]

The Prime Minister: The principal Committee for considering questions relating to the United Kingdom's membership of the European Union is the Ministerial Sub-Committee on European Issues E(DOP). The Committee is chaired by the Foreign Secretary and reports to the Ministerial Committee on Defence and Overseas Policy, which I chair. The composition and terms of reference of E(DOP) were last amended on 19 February 1999 and are as shown. The composition and terms of reference of DOP have not changed since I published an updated list of Cabinet Ministerial Committees on 21 October 1998, Official Report, columns 1123–35. European Union matters will be considered by other Committees from time to time.

The United Kingdom's Permanent Representative to the European Union is also in attendance.

Terms of Reference are:

"To consider questions relating to the United Kingdom's membership of the European Union and to report as necessary to the Ministerial Committee on Defence and Overseas Policy".

Environmental Advisory Committees

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister what steps he is taking to achieve greater co-ordination between the Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment and the Advisory Committee on Pesticides. [81450]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 20 April 1999]: The Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment and the Advisory Committee on Pesticides already co-ordinate through their Secretariats and exchange information on matters of mutual interest such as the use of pesticides on genetically modified plants. The future co-ordination of these and other committees is subject to the outcome of the 'review of the framework for overseeing developments in biotechnology' announced by my right hon. Friend, the Minister for the Cabinet Office on 17 December 1998, Official Report, columns 644–45.

Engagements

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Wednesday 21 April. [81275]

The Prime Minister: This morning, I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be leaving for Washington. I have also sent a message on behalf of Britain to the United States of America, expressing our shock and sympathy for the appalling tragedy of the murdered schoolchildren in Littleton, Colorado. I know the whole House will share those sentiments.

WALES

Playgroups

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to assist playgroups in Wales; and if he will make a statement. [78957]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: On 1 April 1999, I announced funding of £50,000, to be split between the Wales Pre-School Playgroups Association and Mudiad Ysgolian Meithrin, to help sustain good quality playgroups in Wales. This is in addition to the £50,000 made available in 1998–99 to support playgroups at risk of closing.

I have also announced that there will be a review of how playgroups and the pre-school movement can develop their role in delivering both early years education and childcare in Wales.

In future, childcare will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Macpherson Inquiry

Mr. Efford: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the implications for his Department of the Macpherson Inquiry recommendations; and if he will make a statement. [80533]

Mr. Michael: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to him on 14 April 1999, Official Report, columns 239–40, by the Minister for the Cabinet Office. In addition, I welcome the findings of the Macpherson report. Its existence, and in particular its definition of institutional racism, is an important backdrop to the work my Department is undertaking on building race equality into its policies and procedures—work which will be taken forward with statutory backing in the National Assembly for Wales.

Shotton

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will meet Shotton town council to discuss the impact of out-of-town retail outlets upon the town's retail outlets; and if he will make a statement. [80844]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is unable to meet Shotton town council on this matter. New planning policy guidance for Wales was issued on 7 April this year including further encouragement for locating new retailing in town centres and clarifying policy in respect of testing the need for new shopping proposals.

In the future, guidance on retailing will be a matter for the National Assembly for Wales.

Nurses

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many extra nurses he has recruited; and if he will make a statement. [80842]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: Information on individual Trust recruitment is not held centrally.

Annual intakes of nursing students in Wales have increased from 656 in 1994 to 992 in 1998. In February 1999, there were 2,282 nursing students in Wales being trained to meet NHS Trusts' demands for newly qualified staff. As a result of a survey of individual Trusts' needs, advertisements will be placed in local newspapers to attract registered nurses back to the NHS in Wales and we shall be asking Trusts to provide information on the outcome of this campaign in due course.

Following the transfer of functions, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly for Wales.

Royal Commission on Long-term Care

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what response he proposes to make to the Royal Commission's report on Long Term Care. [80839]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: I refer to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health's statement to the House on 1 March 1999, Official Report, columns 741–52. The Government welcome the Report and wish to see a full public debate on the recommendation that the Royal Commission has made. The Commission's recommendations are wide-ranging, covering matters which will need to be decided at a UK level and others which will be the responsibility of the National Assembly for Wales.

Retail Outlets

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will set up a working party to examine the impact of out-of-town retail outlets upon town shopping areas; and if he will make a statement. [80843]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has no plans to set-up a working party on retail matters. New planning policy guidance for Wales was issued on 7 April this year including further encouragement for locating new retailing in town centres and clarifying policy in respect of testing the need for new shopping developments.

In the future, planning guidance on retail development will be a matter for the National Assembly for Wales.

Green Belt

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many (a) Green Belt and (b) green barrier areas there are in Wales; and if he will make a statement. [80845]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: There are currently no Green Belts in Wales and information on the extent of green barriers in Wales is not collected centrally.

Planning policy guidance on Green Belts in Wales is set out in the first revision of "Planning Guidance (Wales): Planning Policy" which was published on 7 April.

In future, planning guidance on Green Belts in Wales will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Beef on the Bone Ban

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if the National Assembly for Wales will have the power to (a) modify and (b) lift the ban on beef sold on the bone; and if he will make a statement. [81622]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: Yes. The power under which the Beef Bones Regulations 1997 were made will be transferred to the National Assembly for Wales.

CABINET OFFICE

Public Consultation Exercises

15. Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what monitoring has taken place of the conduct of public consultation exercises by Government Departments. [80306]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: The Cabinet Office are monitoring written consultation exercises so as to evaluate how far the guidance has been adopted and what impact it has made on the quality of consultation.

Anti-drugs Policy

18. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office when he will announce his criteria for measuring changes in illegal drug (i) use, (ii) addiction and (iii) deaths. [80310]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: Details of how we will measure progress towards all objectives linked to the four key aims of the strategy will be included in the co-ordinator's report and plan, due to be published shortly.

Absenteeism

19. Mrs. Gilroy: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what discussions he has had with trade unions representing public sector organisations to reduce absenteeism rates at work. [80311]

Mr. Kilfoyle: In developing guidance on managing attendance in the public sector, my officials have worked closely with the TUC, Unison and the Council of Civil Service Unions. This issue was also touched upon in one of my regular meetings with the Council.

Departmental Buildings (Marsham Street)

20. Mr. Leigh: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office when he will demolish the old Department of the Environment buildings at Marsham Street. [80312]

Mr. Kilfoyle: The Government are committed to the demolition of the building at 2 Marsham Street. However, we are not yet in a position to proceed with immediate demolition. Temporary re-use, or demolition and re-building, are being considered by the Home Office as part of their PFI accommodation project. Their decision on which option to follow is expected later this year.

Civil Service (Ethnic Minorities)

21. Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will make a statement on his plans to increase the representation of ethnic minorities in the senior civil service. [80314]

Mr. Kilfoyle: The Civil Service has a strong commitment to equality of opportunity and wants to reflect the full diversity of society at all levels.

Addressing the under-representation of ethnic minorities in the Senior Civil Service is a priority. The Modernising Government White Paper set out targets for ethnic minority representation in the Senior Civil Service. By 2004–05, our aim is that 3.2 per cent. of the Senior Civil Service will be from ethnic minority backgrounds—this is double the current position.

Biotechnology

22. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office pursuant to his oral answer of 10 February 1999, Official Report, column 307, on the biotechnology and genetic modification ministerial group, if he will place in the Library his assessment of the prospective benefits to humankind of biotechnology. [80315]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: As Minister for the Cabinet Office I have commissioned no such assessments. However, I can inform the House that the prospective benefits of biotechnology have been well documented in a number of reports from the S&T Select Committees of this House and the S&T and European Communities' Select Committees of the Other Place.

Common Agricultural Policy (Duchy of Lancaster)

23. Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will make a statement on the ways in which CAP reform will have an impact upon the returns from the estates currently run by the Duchy of Lancaster. [80316]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: The Duchy of Lancaster lets all productive agricultural land on its estates to tenant farmers. The returns to the Duchy from let farms are in the form of farm rents. These rents are related to the earning capacity and profitability of farm holdings.

Should reform of the Common Agricultural Policy bring a change in the economics of tenanted farms, the Duchy would expect this to affect the earning capacities of the holdings, being the basis on which rents are calculated.

Policy Presentation

24. Mr. Winnick: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what further steps are being taken to co-ordinate the presentation of Government policies through advertising in the media. [80319]

Mr. Kilfoyle: Advertising is used to support the particular communication needs of individual policies or programmes. Under Cabinet Office Guidance, Departments must ensure that advertising is the most economical, efficient and effective way to meet the need, and that any campaign is no bigger than necessary.

"Modernising Government"

25. Mr. Amess: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what recent representations he has received on the White Paper "Modernising Government". [80320]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: I refer my hon. Friend to the statement I made to the House on 30 March 1999, Official Report, columns 859–61, commending Modernising Government. Members of the public as well as those who work in the public service have been invited to feed in their views on the White Paper, in writing or direct to the Modernising Government e-mail address: at Moderngov@gtnet.gov.uk. To-date some 50 responses have been received.

Ombudsman (Maladministration)

Mr. David Heath: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what remedy is available to an individual who believes he has suffered from maladministration on the part of an ombudsman. [80302]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: If a complainant is dissatisfied with the way in which the investigation of their complaint has been handled by the Parliamentary Ombudsman, they can ask their MP to take up the matter with the Chairman of the Select Committee on Public Administration.

Government Departments (Telephone Advice)

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what steps he is taking to improve the quality of advice given to the public by telephone from Government Departments. [80303]

Mr. Kilfoyle: The Modernising Government White Paper set out revised service standards for central Government Departments and agencies. These included, for the first time, a commitment to answer telephone calls quickly and helpfully.

Professional Statisticians

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how many staff by grade are employed as professional statisticians in his Department; how many of these staff have been accepted as fast stream by the Civil Service Selection Board; and how many have been granted chartered statistician status by the Royal Statistical Society. [81207]

Mr. Kilfoyle: Statistical work is undertaken by a range of specialists such as Research Officers, Social Survey Officers and Economists. Within the Cabinet Office, there are two Band A staff employed as professional statisticians, both of whom were recruited through the Civil Service Selection Board. Neither hold the status of Chartered Statistician.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how many staff who have worked as professional statisticians in the Cabinet Office have left on early retirement in each of the past 10 years. [81187]

Mr. Kilfoyle: No professional statisticians on the permanent strength of the Cabinet Office have left on early retirement in any of the past 10 years.

Charter Mark

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what plans he has to extend the charter mark award scheme. [80321]

Mr. Kilfoyle: We expect to receive 1,500 applications in 1999; a 25 per cent. increase over the record 1998 figure of 1,200. We have also launched a self-assessment pack, to encourage more and better applications, and as a useful quality tool in its own right.

In 2000 we are expanding the Scheme to include all voluntary organisations which provide a public service and which are 50 per cent. or more financed from public funds; and to include sub-contractors to the public sector which are providing services also provided by the public sector.

Government Intranet

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what plans he has to establish links between the Government Intranet and the European Parliament equivalent. [80318]

Mr. Kilfoyle: The Central Information Technology Unit (CITU) and the European Secretariat in the Cabinet Office are currently piloting an electronic link to the European Council Secretariat. CITU, together with the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency (CCTA) and the European Commission are investigating the technical options for connecting the Government Secure Intranet and networks of the IDA project (Interchange of Data between Administrations).

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Unmarried Fathers

Mr. Hopkins: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department when he plans to implement the commitment that unmarried fathers will have the same responsibilities as married fathers under the Children Act 1989. [80725]

Mr. Hoon: With one in three children born outside marriage, the Government want to encourage unmarried fathers to recognise their responsibilities towards their children. The Children Act 1989 already enables unmarried fathers to acquire parental responsibility either by making a parental responsibility agreement with the child's mother or by applying to the court for a parental responsibility order. When an appropriate legislative opportunity arises, the Government intend to introduce a provision that unmarried fathers who sign the birth certificate jointly with the mother will acquire parental responsibility without further formality.

Legal Aid Board (Staff Absence)

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department how much absence through illness was recorded at the Legal Aid Board during the year 1998–99 in relation to grades 7 and above; and what the figures were for 1995–96. [81249]

Mr. Hoon: The Board has this month begun to collect information on sick absence centrally. This information is not readily available in the form requested for any earlier period, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Judiciary (Complaints)

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what action he takes on receipt of a complaint against a member of the judiciary; and if he will make a statement. [81222]

Mr. Hoon: The Lord Chancellor takes complaints about members of the judiciary very seriously. In order to maintain the independence of the judiciary, judges are not accountable to the Lord Chancellor for their judicial decisions. The appropriate recourse against judicial decisions lies in the appeal or review process in the courts. However, when complaints are made about the personal conduct of a judge, the Lord Chancellor instructs officials to make inquiries on his behalf. These inquiries generally include drawing the matter to the attention of the judge concerned and giving him or her an opportunity to comment. Where necessary, the Lord Chancellor will also call for transcripts or other additional information. The judge's comments are considered by the Lord Chancellor and, if appropriate, are used by him to inform a reply to the complainant, and a copy is sent to the judge. Each complaint is dealt with individually.

The Lord Chancellor's statutory powers are limited to the dismissal of judicial office holders, below the level of the High Court Bench, on the grounds of misbehaviour and incapacity and these are accordingly exercisable only in extreme cases. But the Lord Chancellor, as Head of the Judiciary, is able to guide, counsel, advise, or rebuke with a view to ensuring that judges uphold the standard of conduct which the public expect of them.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department how many complaints he has received about the behaviour of members of the judiciary in each of the last three years; how many have been upheld; and if he will make a statement. [81246]

Mr. Hoon: The principle of judicial independence, which is central to our constitutional arrangements, means that it is not open to the Lord Chancellor or his Department to consider complaints about judicial decisions made by judges within their own independent sphere. The Lord Chancellor does, however, consider complaints about the personal conduct of members of the judiciary. In the period between August 1998 (when new internal arrangements for handling such complaints came into force) and March 1999, the Lord Chancellor received a total of 2,109 complaints about members of the judiciary, the majority of which related to judicial decisions. Of the remainder, 183 were taken forward for investigation as they related to personal conduct. To date, 26 of these cases are outstanding. Out of the 157 completed cases, there were five occasions when the Lord chancellor saw fit to take further action, either by writing to the judge or by arranging for him or her to be seen by officials. Comparable figures for the period before August 1998 are unavailable.

Professional Statisticians

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department how many staff by grade are employed as professional statisticians in his Department; how many of these staff have been accepted as fast stream by the Civil Service Selection Board; and how many have been granted chartered statistician status by the Royal Statistical Society. [81204]

Mr. Hoon: Currently, there are seven professional statisticians within the Department, who have been accepted as fast streamers. None has been granted chartered statistician status by the Royal Statistical Society.

The following table provides a breakdown, by grade.

Grade	Number
Grade 6 statistician	1
Grade 7 statistician	3
Assistant statistician	3
Total	7

The figures include professional statisticians who may be currently working in administrative posts.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department how many staff who have worked as professional statisticians in his Department have left on early retirement in each of the past 10 years. [81184]

Mr. Hoon: No professional statisticians have left on early retirement in the past 10 years.

Legal Aid (Cape plc)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department which members of his Department had discussions with GJW on (a) how many occasions and (b) what dates concerning the wish by Cape plc to amend the Access to Justice Bill [Lords] to ban foreign employees of British companies obtaining legal aid; how many officials were involved; what undertakings were given; what plans he has to introduce amendments to the Bill that will meet the wishes of Cape plc; and when he informed other Ministers of Cape plc's representations. [81151]

Mr. Hoon: No members of my Department have had discussions with GJW concerning the wish of Cape plc to amend the Access to Justice Bill [Lords] to ban foreign employees of British companies from obtaining legal aid.

The Government have no plans to exclude from legal aid people pursuing actions in England and Wales solely because they live outside this country. The Access to Justice Bill will, however, enable the Government to target available public money on priority needs. Because most sound claims for personal injury can be funded privately, using conditional fee agreements, generally legal aid will not, in future, be available to fund them.

Written Answers to Questions

Thursday 22 April 1999

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Bank Charges

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he plans to meet representatives of the banking community to discuss their charging practices. [81646]

Dr. Howells: This policy area is the responsibility of Her Majesty's Treasury. I have no plans to meet representatives at this time.

Shipbuilding Intervention Fund

Dr. Palmer: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement about the availability of Shipbuilding Intervention Fund grants for 1999. [82166]

Mr. Battle: I have decided to extend the Shipbuilding Intervention Fund for currently eligible yards until 31 December 1999. The rates of support will be unchanged from those in 1998, namely 9 per cent. for large ships and 4½ per cent. for small ships, both rates inclusive of Shipbuilders' Relief of 2 per cent. These are the maximum rates permitted within the EU's Shipbuilding Regulation.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Lough Foyle

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the policy of Her Majesty's Government is on the pay of the crew of the research vessel Lough Foyle. [81213]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland contracts out the management and crewing of the research vessel "Lough Foyle" via periodic competitive tender.

The tenderers, not the Department, determine the pay of the crew, within an overall tender package.

Firearms

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many legally registered firearms have been (a) reported stolen, (b) found to be missing and (c) otherwise separated from (i) private and (ii) public owners in each of the last 10 years; and what percentage that represents of the total number of legally held weapons. [81131]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 21 April 1999]: Records are not maintained by the RUC in a manner that would provide a breakdown of firearms stolen or found to be missing into the categories requested. However I am advised by the Chief Constable that the total numbers of legally registered firearms reported stolen or found to be missing from private and public owners in Northern Ireland in each of the last 10 years are follows:

Period	Private	Public	Total
16 April 1989–15 April 1990	78	5	83
16 April 1990–15 April 1991	79	10	89
16 April 1991–15 April 1992	76	1	77
16 April 1992–15 April 1993	87	4	91
16 April 1993–15 April 1994	84	1	85
16 April 1994–15 April 1995	84	2	86
16 April 1995–15 April 1996	80	2	82
16 April 1996–15 April 1997	97	3	100
16 April 1997–15 April 1998	143	2	145
16 April 1998–15 April 1999	125	4	129
Total	933	34	967

In the present context "public owners" is taken to mean those public sector employees who require a firearm for their official duties and hold same on foot of a firearms certificate issued to them by the Chief Constable.The methods used by the RUC to keep firearms statistics in general, or those reported stolen or found to be missing do not permit a percentage calculation for the years requested.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list the names of approved firearms clubs giving (a) the estimated membership of each, (b) the parliamentary constituency in which its premises are located and (c) the (i) number and (ii) types of weapons reported (1) stolen and (2) lost from each club in the last five years. [81132]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 21 April 1999]: The following is a list of firearms clubs authorised by the Secretary of State under Article 54 of the Firearms (NI) Order 1981 together with the estimated membership of each and the Parliamentary Constituencies in which the clubs' authorised premises are located. I am advised by the Chief Constable that information regarding the number and types of firearms reported stolen or lost from each club in the last five years is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many legally held firearms there are in Northern Ireland (a) in total and (b) of each type. [81133]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 21 April 1999]: The Chief Constable has advised me that at 31 December 1998 there were 139,588 legally held firearms in Northern Ireland. The breakdown of these is as follows:

Type of firearm	Number
Shotguns	90,548
Airguns	22,109
Rifles	14,254
Handguns	12,090
Miscellaneous	[1]587

[1] Mainly firearms used for the humane killing of animals

In relation to the reply give to my hon. Friend on 16 April 1999, Official Report, columns 359–60, I would advise that the figure quoted for miscellaneous firearms was incorrect. The correct figure is quoted on this occasion.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Discontinued Prosecutions

32. Mr. David Heath: To ask the Attorney-General on how many occasions the Crown Prosecution Service has discontinued criminal prosecutions since May 1997 on the grounds of disproportionate cost. [80380]

The Solicitor-General: Each case which the police send to the Crown Prosecution Service is reviewed by a Crown Prosecutor. The case will be carefully considered to make sure that it meets the tests set out in the Code for Crown Prosecutors, which is issued under section 10 of the Prosecution of Offences Act 1985. The Code states that where there is enough evidence to offer a realistic prospect of conviction, in cases of seriousness, a prosecution will be the usual course of action unless there are public interest factors tending against prosecution which clearly outweight those tending in favour.

Cost, on its own, is not a factor that determines whether or not a prosecution should be discontinued. However, if during the course of a prosecution it becomes clear that a court is likely to impose only a very small or nominal penalty, a prosecution may no longer be in the public interest and the proceedings may be discontinued.

The Crown Prosecution Service does not maintain any central record of discontinued cases. The information is recorded on individual case files, the recovery of which would involve disproportionate cost.

Case Presentation

33. Mr. Jack: To ask the Attorney-General what steps he plans to take to improve the way in which cases are presented to the CPS and Serious Fraud Office for prosecution. [80381]

The Solicitor-General: The Serious Fraud Office is responsible both for the investigation and prosecution of cases involving serious or complex fraud. In almost every case it investigates in conjunction with a police force and there is a Memorandum of Understanding between the Director of the Serious Fraud Office and ACPO on how investigations are to be conducted. The Memorandum places an emphasis on planning and accountability and in every case SFO documentary control systems are used to ensure the efficient use of investigator and police time. The Crown Prosecution Service is working with the police on a number of initiatives to improve the way that cases are presented to the Crown Prosecution Service including collaboration on ways of implementing the Glidewell recommendations to introduce joint police/CPS Criminal Justice Units to facilitate the progress of cases through the magistrates' courts and the establishment of Trial Units to handle Crown Court casework.

Crown Prosecution Service

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Attorney-General what recent representations he has received on his proposals to reform the Crown Prosecution Service. [80375]

The Solicitor-General: There is continuing interest in the reform of the Crown Prosecution Service. The Attorney-General and I regularly receive inquiries and representations from hon. Members about the Service.

Sir Iain Glidewell's Report on the Crown Prosecution Service made a number of recommendations aimed at reform of the Crown Prosecution Service. Additionally, the Government decided to re-structure the CPS into 42 geographical Areas to improve efficiency and accountability.

The Crown Prosecution Service is making good progress in considering and implementing the recommendations in Sir Iain Glidewell's Report. Additionally, the new 42 Chief Crown Prosecutors are now in post to take forward the reforms that will improve efficiency.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Attorney-General what steps he takes to ensure that the Crown Prosecution Service gives due weight to environmental considerations in deciding whether to pursue a prosecution. [80379]

The Solicitor-General: A number of prosecuting authorities are responsible for the enforcement of cases involving environmental considerations. Agencies such as the Environment Agency prosecute a high proportion of such cases; the Crown Prosecution Service prosecutes offences investigated by the police. All prosecuting authorities must apply the Code for Crown Prosecutors when making the decision to prosecute. If there is sufficient evidence, environmental considerations will be a factor taken into account when deciding whether a prosecution is required in the public interest.

Homicides (London)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Attorney-General how many cases of homicide in London (a) have not been the subject of commencement of legal proceedings, (b) have been the subject of commenced but discontinued legal proceedings, (c) have been the subject of completed legal proceedings, but without conviction and (d) have led to conviction, for each year since the CPS was established. [80372]

The Solicitor-General: The CPS do not keep central records. Figures compiled by the Home Office from police notifications show that:

Year offence recorded	Number of offences	(a) Not commenced per cent.	(b) Commenced but discontinued per cent.	(c) Completed but no conviction for homicide per cent.	(d) Conviction per cent.
1986	210	13	1	24	61
1987	193	14	1	21	64
1988	148	17	1	20	63
1989	177	16	—	23	61
1990	184	19	—	25	55
1991	184	16	1	27	56
1992	175	12	1	29	59
1993	160	16	—	23	62
1994	167	20	1	21	58
1995	167	24	2	19	54
1996	144	19	1	19	56
1997	180	29	1	12	42

In addition, there were proceedings pending as follows: 1 in 1986, 1 in 1994, 1 in 1995, 7 in 1996 and 29 in 1997.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

European Commission Funding

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer to the right hon. Member for Penrith and The Border (Mr. Maclean) of 18 March 1999, Official Report, columns 759–60, concerning EU budget line B3–306, for what reason the Commission removed the prohibition in the amended Budget Line notes; and what is the basis for the statement that the Commission shares his Department's view of how such expenditure should be used. [80177]

Ms Quin: The drafting of language used in this Budget Line is a matter for the European Commission.

I refer the hon. Member to the Budget Line notes for 1999. They state:

> "These measures are designed to be an effective channel of communication and dialogue between the people of the European Union and the Community institutions. They take account of specific national and regional characteristics, in close co-operation with the Member State authorities."

Le Monde Article

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if his Department was informed in advance of the intended placement of the article by the hon. Member for Rotherham (Mr. MacShane) in Le Monde on 3 March. [80156]

Mr. Robin Cook: No.

EU Common Foreign and Security Policy

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to deposit the agendas for the EU Common Foreign and Security Policy Working Groups in the Library. [80149]

Ms Quin: The Government do not have discretion unilaterally to disclose documents which may jeopardise the confidentiality of internal European Union discussion, such as the agendas of CFSP working groups, which, on occasions, can be sensitive. However, the Government are committed to ensuring more effective parliamentary scrutiny of, and greater openness in EU business, including the Common Foreign and Security Policy (CFSP), and have introduced procedures for the parliamentary scrutiny of all CFSP Common Positions, Joint Actions, and other politically important documents.

The UK participates in a very large number of working-level meetings in the international organisations of which it is a member: not only in the EU but also, for example, in the UN, NATO and the OSCE.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what meetings have been held between (a) United Kingdom Ministers, (b) British diplomats and (c) other parties acting on behalf of the United Kingdom with President Slobodan Milosevic since he assumed the presidency of Yugoslavia; on which date the meetings were held; and what matters were discussed in each case. [81578]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I met President Milosevic on 31 October 1997 when I informed him that we wanted the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia to rejoin the European family of nations but that this would require progress on democratisation, indicted war criminals and Kosovo. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary travelled to Belgrade to discuss Kosovo with President Milosevic on 5 March 1998.

Our Ambassador in Belgrade, Ivor Roberts, was present during the first of the above calls and met Milosevic separately on 10 June 1997 when the conversation was dominated by war criminals and Kosovo. Brian Donnelly, our subsequent Ambassador, presented his credentials to Milosevic on 19 December 1997: the call focused on Bosnia, war criminals and Kosovo.

Ivor Roberts travelled to Belgrade on 2 July 1998 as my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary's Special Representative to discuss Kosovo. The Leader of the Liberal Democrat Party met Milosevic on 29 September and handed over a letter from the Prime Minister.

Former Yugoslavia

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list (a) the dates when the Government of the United Kingdom recognised the independence of new states which were parts of the former state of Yugoslavia, (b) what conditions were imposed on their recognition, (c) whether the conditions were imposed in concert with the then other members of the European Community and (d) the dates of such decisions taken by the Council of Ministers. [81434]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The Republics of Croatia and Slovenia were both recognised by the UK, as part of a concerted European Community move, on 15 January 1992.

The Republic of Bosnia-Herzegovina was recognised by all European Community states on 7 April 1992.

The Republic of Macedonia was recognised by the United Kingdom on 8 April 1993 when it was admitted to the United Nations.

The UK recognised the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia in line with EU partners on 9 April 1996 following the change in regional circumstances post-Dayton.

Recognition followed advice given by the Badinter Arbitration Commission to the European Community Peace Conference on whether the Republics applying for recognition as independent states met all the conditions set in the European Community Declaration of 16 December 1991.

Defence Exports

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will ensure that annual reports on defence exports contain a breakdown of licences refused. [81170]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The first Annual Report on Strategic Export Controls gives a breakdown of licences refused by country and by the Military List rating of the goods. The Government will review the level of information to be disclosed in future reports in the light of reactions to the first report.

International War Crimes Tribunal (Kosovo)

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps are being taken to ensure that (a) relevant intelligence information gathered by NATO in recent weeks is made available to the International War Crimes Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia and (b) the tribunal receives adequate resources to enable it to carry out its work in respect of events in Kosovo. [81649]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: A senior FCO official, David Gowan, has been appointed to be Kosovo War Crimes Coordinator. He will be responsible for ensuring that the Government pass as much information as possible, including intelligence, to the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia that might be relevant to the Tribunal's investigations. The Tribunal's budget, set by the UN, is 51 per cent. larger this year than last. The Tribunal is devoting substantial effort to investigating events in Kosovo, but we are not aware that it needs additional funds at present.

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what additional supplementary contributions the Government are giving to the International War Crimes Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia to enable it to carry out its work in relation to the events in Kosovo. [81730]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The Government have already contributed £290,000 this year to support various aspects of the work of the International War Crimes Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia, in addition to the UK's assessed contribution for 1999 of US$5.08m. The Tribunal has not so far sought further financial contributions for its work on Kosovo. We will give careful consideration to any such requests should they be made. We are also considering certain requests for assistance in kind, in addition to the assistance with information on atrocities that we are already providing to the Tribunal.

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will ask the UN General Assembly to make a special allocation to the International War Crimes Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia to meet the needs of the Tribunal arising from the events in Kosovo. [81729]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The United Nations General Assembly allocated the International War Crimes Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia a budget for 1999 which was 51 per cent. greater than that allocated for 1998. The Tribunal has not so far sought a further budget provision to cover its work relating to Kosovo. We would give sympathetic consideration to any such request to the General Assembly.

Single Market

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the progress made under the United Kingdom presidency of the EU of the Single Market Action Plan by number of targets achieved; and how many targets were met during each other presidency. [81226]

Mr. Byers: I have been asked to reply.

The Single Market Action Plan, which was endorsed by the European Council in Amsterdam in June 1997, set an ambitious 18-month programme in the run-up to the introduction of the euro. Regular reports on the implementation of the Action Plan have been provided at six-monthly intervals by the Single Market Scoreboard. Three such Scoreboards were published during the lifetime of the Action Plan, during the Luxembourg, UK and Austrian Presidencies. It is clear that good progress has been made in implementing the measures contained in the Action Plan, as the Commission reports in its Communication assessing the Action Plan (COM(1999)74 Final of 18 February), and the UK Presidency played no small part in contributing to that success.

SCOTLAND

CS Sprays

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 8 March 1999, Official Report, columns 57–58, on CS sprays, if he will place in the Library a copy of the report arising out of the evaluation of the trial with CS sprays. [80816]

Mr. Henry McLeish: I am arranging for a copy of the police report to be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Tree Planting

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what measures he is taking to increase the level of tree planting. [80371]

Mr. Macdonald: We are fully committed to increasing the area of woodland in Britain. The Forestry Commission's Woodland Grant Scheme and the Agriculture Department's Farm Woodland Premium Scheme both offer grants to landowners to establish new woodlands. The Woodland Grant Scheme also offers Challenge Funds and Locational Supplements to target new planting in certain areas and the Commission has a Land Regeneration Unit to encourage the conversion of derelict land to woodland. We launched a Forestry Strategy for England recently which will help focus our efforts to promote new planting; the Scottish Parliament and the National Assembly in Wales will, of course, develop their own policies on forestry in Scotland and Wales.

TREASURY

Self-Assessment Tax Returns

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will publish the Inland Revenue Faster Working procedure used in the Wye Valley region of the Inland Revenue; [80253]

(2) which Inland Revenue regional offices offer the Faster Working procedure; [80254]

(3) what proportion and how many Inland Revenue inquiries have been conducted under the Faster Working procedure. [80255]

Dawn Primarolo: Under the Faster Working procedures, Inland Revenue inquiries into self-assessment tax returns may proceed according to a flexible timetable agreed between the inspector and the taxpayer or the taxpayer's agent. No statistics are maintained on the number of inquiries conducted under Faster Working. All Inland Revenue Regions offer Faster Working. There are agreed national guidelines for Faster Working, an outline of which has been published in Inland Revenue leaflet IR162.

Alcohol Duty Evasion

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the level of alcohol duty evasion in each of the last three years. [81055]

Mrs. Roche: HM Customs and Excise estimates for revenue evaded (excise duty and VAT) through cross-Channel smuggling of alcohol for the last three years are given in the table.

Table 1: Revenue evaded through cross-Channel smuggling of alcohol

£ million

	1996			1997			1998
Product type	Duty	VAT	Total	Duty	VAT	Total	Duty	VAT	Total
Beer	95	45	135	95	50	150	120	65	185

Total	185	80	265	165	80	240	915	95	290

Note:
Figures have been independently rounded to £5 million. Components may not therefore sum to the totals shown.

The above estimates exclude any amounts for revenue evaded through smuggling in freight consignments or diversion type fraud of alcoholic drinks.

Further details of the cross-border shopping and cross-Channel smuggling estimates are given in a technical report placed in the House of Commons Library on 19 November 1998.

Smuggled Alcohol

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the value of seizures of alcohol smuggled into the United Kingdom in each of the last three years. [81056]

Mrs. Roche: Since 1995 Customs have made the following seizures of alcohol smuggled into the United Kingdom.

Financial Year	£ million
1995–96	8.0
1996–97	11.7
1997–98	28.7

Figures for the 1998–99 Financial Year are currently being collated and assured.

Savings Ratio

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will place in the Library calculations on a regular basis of the savings ratio disaggregated by income group. [81458]

Ms Hewitt: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply. The article referred to in his reply has been placed in the Library.

Letter from John Kidgell to Mr. Jonathan Sayeed, dated 22 April 1999:

In the absence of the Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your recent question on the UK saving ratio.

The ONS calculates the UK saving ratio, and it is published in the Quarterly National Accounts First Release and Economic Trends. Both publications are available in the House of Commons Library. The ONS does not produce estimates of the saving ratio disaggregated by income group.

The ONS is developing a Social Accounting Matrix (SAM), which will produce estimates of income and expenditure disaggregated by industry and household type. This work could be extended to include a breakdown by income group, but we have no plans to do so at present. A SAM depends on the reconciliation of data from a number of sources, including household surveys, where sample sizes may not be sufficiently large to give robust estimates at the detailed level. Progress on the SAM project will be reported in Economic Trends in due course. A copy of an article by David Hughes, which appeared in Economic Trends in September 1996, giving the framework for the SAM, is attached for your information.

Maintenance Payments

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many people will cease to receive tax relief on maintenance payments at (a) 10 per cent. and (b) 40 per cent. as a result of the change contained in the Finance Bill; [81586]

(2) how much revenue will be raised in 2000–01 as a result of the removal of tax relief for maintenance payments. [81588]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 20 April 1999]: There will be around 350,000 people who will cease to receive relief on maintenance payments in 2000–01 as a result of the 1999 Budget proposals, of which some 310,000 will cease to receive relief at 10 per cent., 20,000 will lose relief at basic rate and 20,000 at higher rate.

There will be around £65 million raised for 2000–01 as a result of the removal of tax relief for maintenance payments. However, a new children's tax credit for families with children is being introduced in 2001–02. These reforms will modernise the personal tax system by getting rid of outdated allowances and bringing in a new relief which will concentrate resources where they are most needed—on families bringing up children.

Small Businesses

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action has been taken to implement the recommendations of the Bath report into the compliance costs to employers of operating PAYE and NICs. [82135]

Dawn Primarolo: The Government are committed to helping business in general, and small business in particular, meet their obligations by providing a range of help, guidance and assistance to them. The Budget contained a number of measures designed to increase support for small business including the creation of the Small Business Service and the new and improved services from the Inland Revenue and Customs and Excise.

The Report by Bath University contained 31 recommendations for Government. Around two-thirds of the recommendations have been accepted. A note providing a more detailed response has been placed in the Library of the House.

Stamp Duty

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what estimate he has made of the revenue generation from the proposed increase in the stamp duty charge on all off-market transfers of tradeable securities; and what assessment he has made of the impact on the savings industry and smaller investors of the increase; [R] [79937]

(2) if he will make a statement on the proposed increase in the stamp duty charge on all off-market transfers of tradeable securities; if this includes transfers into nominee registration, from 50p to £5; on what date the increase is planned to take effect; and what estimate his Department has made of the likely number of annual transfers to which this charge (i) would have applied in 1998–99 and (ii) will apply in 1999–2000. [R] [79936]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 13 April 1999]: In order to streamline the administration of Stamp Duty, the Budget proposed that current charging provisions be standardised to provide for rounding up to a multiple of £5 in all cases, and that fixed stamp duties be set at £5. These changes will take effect from 1 October 1999. The proposals do not affect the stamp duty reserve tax charges on the bulk of share transactions, which are settled in dematerialised form within CREST.

About 1 million transfers of securities in a full year are expected to be subject to these reforms, yielding about £5 million. Most of these are fixed duty transfers involving nominees.

The impact of the new provision on the savings industry and on small investors is expected to be very small.

Speed Enforcement Cameras

Ms Drown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will list the local authority schemes that are being permitted to meet the funding costs of speed enforcement cameras from the money raised from fines and penalties; [80139]

(2) what criteria must be met for a local authority to be permitted to meet the funding costs of speed enforcement cameras from the money raised from fines and penalties. [80140]

Mr. Milburn: At present no local authorities, or other organisations, are permitted to retain the receipts from fines relating to speed enforcement camera convictions.

In December 1998 the Treasury issued a press notice setting out criteria against which requests to offset receipts from fines/penalties against Departmental Expenditure Limits can be assessed. The criteria aim to increase the effectiveness of enforcement while ensuring that such fines continue to be set on justice and deterrence principles and are not used as a means of raising revenue.

The costs associated with speed enforcement cameras are borne by a range of different organisations, including the police, courts and local authorities. DETR, Home Office and Lord Chancellor's Department are currently considering whether receipts from speed enforcement camera related fines would meet the criteria. We would need to be clear that the receipts could be properly apportioned between the authorities involved.

The criteria relate specifically to netting off receipts from expenditure in Departmental Expenditure Limits. They do not directly apply to any local authority self financed expenditure, which is not part of DEL. However, before allowing local authorities to retain a proportion of the receipts from speed camera related fines we would need to be satisfied that they would generally meet the same conditions.

ECOFIN Council

Mr. Hood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the outcome of the ECOFIN Council held in Brussels on 16 to 18 April; and if he will make a statement. [81687]

Ms Hewitt: There was an informal meeting of EU Finance and Economic Ministers and Central Bank Governors in Dresden on 16 to 18 April. In accordance with the usual procedures at these informal meetings, there were no decisions and no minutes were taken.

EU Alcohol Duties

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list in euros the value of the tax and duty imposed on a litre of (a) wine, (b) beer and (c) spirits at 40 degree strength in each EU member state. [81728]

Mrs. Roche: The table shows the excise duty in euros and the percentage rate of VAT.

Because of the VAT component, the total tax will depend on retail selling prices in each member state. Comparable information on this is not available.

Friendly Societies

Mr. Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the impact on friendly societies of the introduction of (a) individual savings accounts, (b) individual learning accounts and (c) stakeholder pensions. [81693]

Ms Hewitt: Given their traditional roots and financial expertise, friendly societies are well placed to take advantage of the opportunities offered by individual savings accounts, individual learning accounts and stakeholder pensions.

Self-employed (National Insurance)

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to the oral answer to the hon. Member for South-West Hertfordshire (Mr. Page), 15 April 1999, Official Report, column 358, on national insurance and the self-employed, what factors underlie the difference between that answer and the figures in Table 1–11 of the Red Book. [81718]

Mrs. Roche: As explained in the Red Book (page 115, final paragraph) the figures in Table 1.11 are on a National Accounts Basis. For National Insurance Contributions this means that the figures depend on when the liability arises, not when the cash is expected to be received.

The question from the hon. Member for South-West Hertfordshire (Mr. Page) asked for the change in the amount to be paid by the self-employed in 2000–01, so the answer gave an estimate of the effect on actual National Insurance Contributions receipts in 2000–01.

Credit Unions

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if mutual shares held by a credit union member held in a common bond can be one of his special savings schemes covered by ISAs. [81606]

Ms Hewitt: No. Shares in credit unions are not a qualifying investment for individual savings accounts.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Inspection Charges

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if the flat rate charges envisaged under the Town and Country Planning (Control of Major Accident Hazards) Regulations will apply regardless of the seniority and experience of the inspector undertaking the inspections on site. [80279]

Mr. Meacher: Yes. All inspectors who carry out assessment or inspection under the Control of Major Accident Hazard Regulations 1999 (COMAH) will be competent by virtue of their qualifications, training and experience to undertake the full range of work. The charge to industry will be at a single rate and is intended to recover the Competent Authority's full cost in line with HM Treasury's Fees and Charges Guide.

London Underground

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on (a) train, (b) signal and (c) track failures in each year since 1994–95 for each line of the London Underground. [81054]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Figures for train, signal and track failures on London Underground since 1994–95 are as follows:

Delays in	Signal/points	Other track	Rolling stock
1994–95	2,349	659	16,123
1995–96	2,494	959	15,192
1996–97	2,323	1,007	14,873
1997–98	2,725	881	17,801
1998–99	2,756	869	20,159

Figures for 1998–99 are provisional.

Figures on a line-by-line basis are not yet available and I will write to the honourable Member.

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the maintenance and investment budget for rolling stock, signalling and track in each year since 1994–95, for each line of the London Underground. [81053]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Figures for the maintenance and investment spend for rolling stock, signalling and track on London Underground for the financial years 1994–95 to 1998–99 are set out in the following table.

Network

Projects spanning more than one line are included here

In the early years, major track replacement was managed as a single project. In 1998–99, a separate project was established for track programme management.

From 1996–97 responsibility for routine signal equipment replacement, carried out according to a programme laid down by the Chief Engineer, was transferred to PSD Network Services. Previously the Metropolitan line managed this function on behalf of the network—and held the costs.

Mobile Crane Drivers

Mr. Alan Johnson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many drivers of mobile cranes have not been granted a Group 2 (category C) licence under the second EC Driving Licence Directive (91/439/EEC) and the implementing legislation (SI 1996/2824). [81244]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The number of mobile crane drivers that have not been granted a Group 2 (category C) licence under the second EC Driving Licence Directive (91/439/EEC) and the implementation legislation (SI 1996/2824) is not available.

Filling Stations (Alternative Fuels)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to the oral answer of 13 April 1999, Official Report, column 18, what estimate he has made of the number of filling stations which offer re-fuelling for (a) LPG and (b) compressed natural gas. [81383]

Ms Glenda Jackson: There are an estimated 174 LPG refuelling points in the UK. Although these are generally open to the public, only about a dozen are sited on retail forecourts. The number of LPG refuelling points is expected to increase to around 500 over the next three years with most of the new refuelling points sited on the forecourt.

Refuelling points for compressed natural gas are predominantly depot based, though some permit third party access. There are around 30 fast-fill refuelling points in the UK suitable for fleet use and around 40 slow-fill refuelling points suitable for single vehicle refuelling. The number of fast-fill refuelling points is expected to double in the next year.

Water Rates

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to change the base of water rates calculated from the rateable values of its 1990 list to more recent valuations. [81486]

Mr. Meale: Rateable values ceased to be used for local government taxation purposes in 1990. Since then there has been no provision for amending or updating rateable values.

We have made clear that we are willing to consider alternatives to the present system of unmeasured charging for water and sewerage services. We shall work with water companies and other groups with an interest to consider proposals for new charging arrangements. Any alternative system would need to provide for fair charges and any transition should be planned to avoid significant advert effects on particular groups of customers.

KPMG

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what (a) consultancy and (b) other contracts his Department has had with KPMG since 1 May 1997; and if KPMG is a prospective candidate for future contracts his Department is intending to let. [81420]

Mr. Meale [holding answer 19 April 1999]: Since 1 May 1997 my Department has utilised six contracts with KPMG for the provision of management consultancy, research consultancy and other specific consultancy (e.g. privatisation) services.

KPMG will continue to be considered for future contracts let by my Department where they are capable of meeting the requirement and are likely to offer best value for money, alongside any other organisations which meet the same criteria.

Environment Council

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will publish the agenda for the forthcoming EU Environment Ministers meeting on 23 to 25 April; and if he will make a statement on his priorities for the meeting. [81489]

Mr. Meacher: This meeting of EU Environment Ministers planned for 23–25 April has been rescheduled for 7–9 May. It is an informal meeting. The following issues will be debated:

Integrated product policy: to explore the scope for promoting more sustainable goods and services;

Chemicals policy: to discuss progress on the review of EC policy on chemicals.

It has not been the practice of successive Administrations to indicate the position Ministers propose to take in advance of Council.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what assessment he has made on the possible level of energy savings to be achieved by improving the energy efficiency of buildings; [81454]

(2) what estimate he has made of the percentage of the country's energy used to heat and light buildings in the UK; [81455]

(3) what plans he has to increase the use of energy efficiency measures in (a) new and (b) existing buildings; [81456]

(4) what assessment he has made of the impact of improving energy efficiency in buildings on helping the Government to achieve their target for reducing carbon dioxide emissions. [81457]

Mr. Meale: Energy efficiency in buildings forms an essential part of the Government's strategy for meeting its targets for reducing greenhouse gas emissions, including carbon dioxide. Under the Kyoto Protocol the UK agreed to reduce its emissions of a basket of six greenhouse gases to 12.5 per cent. below 1990 levels over the period 2008–12. In our manifesto we also set ourselves a domestic goal of a 20 per cent. reduction in carbon dioxide emissions by 2010.

Some initial assessments of the possible energy savings to be achieved by improving the energy efficiency of buildings were published in October 1998 in the Government's climate change consultation paper. The paper set out a number of options on how we might meet our climate change targets. For the domestic sector, we estimated that possible savings of up to 6.5 million tonnes of carbon per year (MtC/Y) by 2010 could be achieved by improving building standards. We also estimated that improvements to public sector buildings could deliver 1.1 MtC/y. The potential contribution of commercial and industrial buildings was estimated as part of the "business" sector and not separately identified in the consultation document. However, we estimated that it could be of the order of 5 MtC/y.

These carbon savings correspond to a reduction of 15 to 20 per cent. on the estimated carbon emissions for 2010 under "business as usual", that is, DTI's central estimate as published in Energy Paper 65.

Space heating and lighting across all building sectors currently account for 32 per cent. of total UK delivered energy consumption.

The DETR already funds a number of programmes and initiatives designed to improve energy efficiency, and increase the use of energy efficiency measures, in both new and existing buildings. These include the Energy Efficiency Best Practice programme, the UK's primary knowledge-based energy efficiency information transfer programme, designed to assist energy users and professionals in industry, commerce, the public and housing sectors and in business transport to improve their energy efficiency. Best Practice also supports research and development to help bring forward tomorrow's energy efficiency measures. The programme includes site specific and project specific consultancy advice on improving the energy efficiency of buildings.

The Home Energy Efficiency Scheme (HEES) provides energy efficiency improvement grants for householders receiving income-related benefit, disability allowance or over 60 years of age.

The Energy Saving Trust continues to develop and implement a range of innovative projects aimed at promoting efficient use of energy in domestic and small business markets and supports Energy Efficiency Advice Centres and the "Energy Efficiency" campaign to promote energy efficiency in the domestic sector.

In addition, the Building Regulations are currently under review to see what maximum contribution they can make to achieving the Government's climate change targets whilst observing proportionality, maintaining acceptable design flexibility and avoiding unacceptable technical risks. The Government have announced their intention to consult on proposals for amendments later this year and the consultation documents will include assessments of the impact on greenhouse gas emissions if these proposals were to be adopted.

The Government are currently considering how to develop the substantial potential of these programmes and what further approaches could be undertaken as part of the development of a new UK Climate Change programme.

Genetically Modified Salmon

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the environmental consequences of the farming of genetically modified salmon. [81451]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 20 April 1999]: No genetically modified salmon are currently being farmed in the UK, and no applications have been received for the release of genetically modified fish. However, the environmental consequences of the farming of genetically modified fish have been considered by the Department and by the Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment (ACRE).

The Department of the Environment published a research report on the Genetic Modification of Fish—a UK Perspective in November 1994. ACRE Guidance Note 8, issued in March 1997, provides guidance for experimental releases of genetically modified fish.

Research into GM fish has increased steadily since the first published reports in 1985 and the technology now exists for the routine modification of a variety of fish species. Some modified traits may affect the ecological range of a fish species, for example increasing the temperature range in which they are able to survive and breed. The implications of such changes would need to be carefully considered in the risk assessment before a release could take place.

The publications offer detailed recommendations on approaches to risk assessment and risk management for GM fish, and for emergency control measures. Guidelines are also provided for carrying out monitoring during and after the release.

Copies of both these publications are in the House of Commons Library.

Areas of Outstanding Natural Beauty

Miss Geraldine Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to provide additional funding for areas of outstanding natural beauty; and if he will make a statement. [81614]

Mr. Meale: We have already announced an additional £2.5 million for the new Countryside Agency to spend in Areas of Outstanding Natural Beauty and similar landscape areas in 1999–2000.

The former Countryside Commission has provided advice to the Government on various aspects of the care of protected landscapes. We are still considering all of the issues very carefully and hope to announce some conclusions soon.

Railway Stations (Staffing)

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is his Department's policy on the staffing of main stations (a) at night and (b) at other times; what discussions he has had with (i) train operators and (ii) the rail regulator on this issue; and if he will make a statement. [81502]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 21 April 1999]: There are no absolute requirements in franchise agreements for stations to be staffed at night or at other times. Train Operating Companies (TOCs) must maintain the existing presence of staff at stations to the hours at which trains call unless they provide substitute facilities in relation to customer information and waiting accommodation. All TOCs are party to the Ticketing and Settlement Agreement, overseen by the Rail Regulator, which includes obligations covering the hours during which ticket offices must be open and the range of products that must be offered for sale. These obligations are closely in line with the arrangements that existed prior to franchising. The hours of opening of ticket offices cannot be reduced without the permission of the Rail Regulator following a consultation process. No discussions have taken place with (i) the train operators and (ii) the rail regulator on this issue.

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will discuss with (a) First North Western Trains and (b) other rail operators the effects of removing platform staff on passenger safety. [81503]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 21 April 1999]: There are no absolute requirements in franchise agreements for platform staff at stations and this is not a health and safety issue. We do, however, consider it very important that passengers perceive the railway as a secure environment and over the past year, operators have been working with the Franchising Director, this Department and the British Transport Police, to deliver the Secure Stations Scheme, which was formally launched in April 1998. This will award accreditation to stations that reach specified standards in design and management, and demonstrate reductions in the crime level and in passengers' perception of crime. A number of stations across the country have now been accredited under the scheme and it is hoped that many more will become accredited in the near future.

The Association of Train Operating Companies (ATOC), which promotes network-wide projects, is implementing a Code of Practice on Passenger Security which identifies best practice, and encourages operators to co-operate with other organisations to improve security in and around stations.

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will seek a report from the rail regulator on the possible effect of the removal of platform staff from Warrington Central Station on the performance targets of First North Western trains. [81504]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 21 April 1999]: Performance in terms of punctuality and reliability is governed by a financial penalties and incentive regime under the franchise agreement between the Franchising Director and First North Western Trains. That applies to results achieved without regard to the operational methods adopted by the Train Operating Company. I understand that First North Western Trains have suspended their plans for staffing reductions at Warrington Central Station and others in the area while they consult with interested groups, individuals and the trade unions.

Railway Passenger Safety

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he has had with the rail operators on the need to ensure the safety of passengers travelling by train. [81505]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 21 April 1999]: The Health and Safety Executive (HSE) monitors and enforces compliance with the Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act 1974 and its relevant statutory provisions to ensure that safety standards on the railway are maintained and improved where necessary. The HSE has regular meetings with train operators and infrastructure controllers to ensure the safety of passengers travelling by train.

Bus Passengers

Mr. Stringer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will estimate the percentage of the 1 per cent. increase in bus passengers which has resulted from passengers changing their mode of transport. [81716]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The information does not exist for this estimate to be made. The one per cent. overall increase is the net result of many shifts and changing trends in trip making. However, in some cases where significant increases in bus use have occurred, for example following investment in new vehicles and bus priority traffic management measures, 10 per cent. or more of the increase has been estimated to represent former car users. Were this also to apply to the full year increase across England it would represent a reduction of about 3.5 million journeys by car.

Mr. Stringer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will estimate the number of local bus passenger journeys in (a) 1995–96, (b) 1996–97, (c) 1997–98 and (d) 1998–99 in (i) London, (ii) English metropolitan areas, (iii) English shire counties and (iv) England. [81714]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The figures up to 1997–98 are taken from tables 10, 13 and 16 of the Transport Statistics Report "Focus on Public Transport Great Britain: 1999 edition", published by The Stationery Office in February 1999. The most recent three years' data are summarised in the table below. Data for 1998–99 will not be available until towards the end of this year.

Local bus services: passenger journeys by area

million

	London	English metropolitan areas	English shire counties	England
1995–96	1,205	1,292	1,265	3,762
1996–97	1,242	1,246	1,265	3,753
1997–98	1,294	1,237	1,248	3,779

Regional Airports

Mr. Stringer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list those countries which have (a) agreed, (b) failed to agree and (c) not responded to his statement of 10 June 1998 on multilateral agreements on 3rd and 4th freedoms at regional airports. [81713]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Following my statement on international access to regional airports in June 1998 my officials approached countries with whom we have air services relations. The following responses have been received:

(a) Agreed

Bahrain, Belarus, Bulgaria, Cameroon, Fiji, Jamaica, Jordan, South Korea, Malaysia, Maldives, Namibia, Pakistan, Qatar, Tanzania, Turkmenistan.

(b) Failed to agree

Armenia, Botswana, Brazil, Egypt, Georgia, Indonesia, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Malawi, Mauritius, Moldova, Mongolia, Myanmar, Saudi Arabia, Seychelles, Syria, Ukraine and Yemen.

(c) Not responded

Algeria, Antigua & Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Azerbaijan, Brunei, Bangladesh, Chile, Cote D'Ivoire, Congo, Cyprus, Ethiopia, Gabon, Ghana, Hong Kong, Hungary, India, Iran, Israel, Japan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lebanon, Mexico, Morocco, Nepal, Oman, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, South Africa, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Thailand, Turkey, Uganda, Vietnam, Zambia and Zimbabwe.

Category (c) includes countries with whom there are on-going official discussions about the offer.

Countryside Agency

Mr. Pond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to issue the Management Statement for the Countryside Agency. [82052]

Mr. Meacher: I am pleased to be able to inform the House that the Management Statement has been issued to the Countryside Agency today. The Statement describes the relationship between the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions and the Agency, sets out the role and status of the Agency and covers its accountability to Parliament. It also contains information on the role and responsibilities of the Chairman, Board and Chief Executive, and briefly describes the Agency's organisation.

A copy of the Statement has today been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

DEFENCE

Firearms Training (Young People)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the types of (i) public and (ii) private institution falling within his area of responsibility in which individuals aged under 18 years may be trained in the use of firearms; and if he will estimate the numbers of individuals receiving such training in each type of institution in each of the last five years. [81136]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Individuals under 18 years of age undertake firearms training in the Regular Forces, Reserves and Cadets. Institutions which carry out such training include recruit schools for initial firearms training, various military units for specific and refresher training and local establishments in the case of Cadets. The three Services do not keep centralised records of such training and, therefore, it is not possible to provide accurate figures of numbers of under 18s who undertake firearms training. Even an estimate could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Armed Forces (Under 18s)

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if under 18 year olds are currently being deployed in the UK armed forces in the former Yugoslavia. [81437]

Mr. George Robertson: There are currently 22 service personnel aged under 18 deployed in the UK armed forces in the former Yugoslavia.

Military Hospitals

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much was (a) paid and (b) rebated to his Department by each of the health trusts in which MDHUs operate for the treatment of civilian personnel by the military in each of the last three years. [80573]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Until 31 March 1999, the contribution made by military clinical staff serving in MDHUs to the treatment of civilian patients was treated as a "free good" from my Department to the NHS. Accordingly, no payments were made to my Department by the host Trusts, either directly or by way of a rebate on other charges, for the treatment of civilian personnel by the military.

Ministerial Meetings (US)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 22 March 1999, Official Report, columns 17–18, how many times Ministers in his Department met their counterparts in the US Administration between 1 January 1998 and 1 June 1998, indicating the dates and locations of each meeting, the Ministers involved and the name of the US counterpart. [80824]

Mr. George Robertson: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Military Training

Ms Julie Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if British military personnel have visited the School of the Americas training establishment at the United States Army base at Fort Benning, Georgia, in each of the last eight years. [81375]

Mr. Doug Henderson: There have been no visits to the School of the Americas training establishment by UK-based military personnel during the last five years, the period for which we have been able to establish figures. The previous British Liaison Officer at Fort Benning, Georgia, made one visit to the School of the Americas training establishment during 1997 as part of his liaison responsibilities. He undertook no training.

War Pensions

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to remove the differences within the War Pensions Scheme as between former officers and other ranks. [81485]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The War Scheme is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security. The MOD and DSS are currently reviewing arrangements for compensating service personnel or their bereaved where disablement or death is due to service in the Forces. The aim is to make proposals for a new compensation scheme that could replace the current War Pension Scheme and the attributable provisions of the Armed Forces Pension Scheme. The War Pension Scheme would remain available for those who have already left the forces including current war pensions.

At present former officers and other ranks received the same level of War Disablement Pension or Gratuity under the War Pension Scheme for the same degree of assessed disablement and regardless of rank. The level of War Widow's Pension, however, is still related to the rank held by the deceased husband in service.

A separate review is also being conducted of the Armed Forces Pension Scheme. This review is examining all the main provisions of that Scheme, including the continuing justification for any differences of treatment between officers and other ranks.

Defence Estates Organisation

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what value of stationery, signage and documentation formerly owned by the Defence Estates Organisation will not be used by Defence Estates, established on 29 March; [81628]

(2) what was the cost of the relaunch of the Defence Estates Organisation. [81629]

Mr. Spellar: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Military Deployment

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current proportion of (a) the Army and (b) Land Command (i) committed and (ii) warned to deploy for operations. [81668]

Mr. Doug Henderson: As at 15 April, the figures requested were as follows:

	Percentage
	Committed to Operations	Warned to deploy on operations
Army personnel	36.1	22.5
Land Command personnel	55.3	34.5

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of the TA is (i) deployed and (ii) warned to deploy for operations in the Balkans. [81664]

Mr. George Robertson: 420 members of the Territorial Army (TA) are currently deployed to the Balkans, the majority in Bosnia, and these represent some 0.74 per cent. of the overall TA. It is likely that a further 80 will be deployed shortly, representing a further 0.14 per cent. of the TA.

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many of the Army's armoured infantry battalions and mechanised infantry battalions are (a) currently employed on operations and (b) warned to deploy for operations. [81660]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Three such battalions are currently deployed on operations, and two are warned to deploy.

Brigade Reinforcements (Macedonia)

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what units from 19 Brigade have reinforced 4 Armoured Brigade for its deployment to Macedonia. [81663]

Mr. George Robertson: One company from the 1st Battalion The King's Own Royal Border Regiment, including 30 personnel each from the 1st Battalion The Highlanders and 1st Battalion The Royal Irish Regiment, is currently deployed to the Balkans as part of the 4th Armoured Brigade. In addition, 19 Brigade Provost Unit (Royal Military Police) is currently in the process of returning to the United Kingdom from the Balkans.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Public Appointments

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the public appointments for which his Department is responsible and which carry a fee or salary, indicating for each type of appointment the fee or salary band which applies. [80755]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 15 April 1999]: The information on appointees who receive an annual remuneration or salary is listed in the following table. Some other appointees may receive a daily remuneration (pro-rated where necessary) where the public body has the statutory power to make such a payment.

(4) what is the maximum amount of money available to a claimant under the Motability scheme to assist in the purchase of a vehicle. [81400]

Mr. Bayley: The information is in the tables.

Total Gross Departmental Expenditure on the Motability Scheme in each of the last five financial years

	1994–95 outturn	1995–96 outturn	1996–97 outturn	1997–98 outturn	£ million 1998–99 estimated outturn

Year	Number
1994	20
1995	20
1996	23
1997	25
1998	27

The total number of vehicles bought under the Motability Scheme in each of the last five years

Year	Number
1994	90,125
1995	105,025
1996	125,529
1997	137,509
1998	132,698

The maximum amount of money available to a claimant under the Motability scheme to assist in the purchase of a vehicle is the weekly amount of the benefits which allow access to the Scheme. These are £41.25 and £37.00 for War Pensioners Mobility Supplement and the Higher Rate Mobility Component of Disability Living Allowance respectively. Also, grants are available from Motability's charitable funds along with the Mobility Equipment Fund and Drivers Fund. There vary in amount from small sums to pay for initial deposits and grants of over £30,000 depending on the type of driving solution recommended by Motability. In respect of grants, Motability does ask its customers to contribute as much as they reasonably can towards the cost of their vehicle.

Reduced Earnings Allowance

Mr. John Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants are awaiting the determination of appeals against loss of reduced earnings allowance. [81427]

Angela Eagle: The information is not available in the format requested as the Independent Tribunal Service (ITS) do not record the reason for appeals against different benefit types. Such information as is available is as follows.

The latest available figures show that as at October 1998, the total number of appeals involving Reduced Earnings Allowance awaiting hearing was 2,618.

Angela Eagle: The installation of bar-code scanners in post offices is not a term of the Department's contracts with Post Office Counters Ltd. (POCL), nor is it a term of the Department's contract with Girobank plc who, in turn, contract with POCL for the encashment of girocheques at post offices.

Pensioners (Average Incomes)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish the most recent estimates of the average incomes of pensioners in OECD countries as a proportion of average earnings. [81733]

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Kosovo Refugees

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans she has to take steps to enable refugees from Kosovo to accept temporary work on the land in the United Kingdom; and if she will make a statement. [81566]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I have been asked to reply.

Evacuees from Kosovo who arrive in the United Kingdom under the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees Humanitarian Evacuation Programme will be granted exceptional leave to enter and, as a consequence, permitted to take employment immediately. In common with asylum applicants of other nationalities, those from Kosovo who have arrived independently in the United Kingdom will be entitled to seek permission to take employment if they have been waiting for a decision on their case for six months.

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many refugees from Kosovo she expects will be given shelter in the United Kingdom; and if she will make a statement. [81564]

Mr. Straw: I have been asked to reply.

The primary aim of the Government is to care for refugees in the region, and to facilitate their return to Kosovo. We are working together with our European Union and North Atlantic Treaty Organisation partners and with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR).

We have long made clear that we stand ready to respond to requests for UNHCR to take vulnerable refugees from Kosovo on a temporary basis. We have agreed with UNHCR that any recommendations for evacuation from the region should be co-ordinated through the office of the UNHCR.

I announced on 20 April that arrangements had been agreed for the admission of 120 evacuees, mainly women and children, expected in the next few days. This decision was made following advice from UNHCR that the refugees were deemed to be vulnerable and in need of temporary protection outside the region.

HEALTH

Asset Sales

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list by region, the income to each NHS trust and health authority, in each of the last 10 years for the sale of assets, land and properties; what uses this income has been put to; and what estimate he has made by region, of the income to each NHS trust and health authority, for each of the next 10 years, from the sale of assets, land and property. [76478]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 15 March 1999]: Information on the income of each National Health Service trust and health authority from the sale of assets, land and properties from 1991/92 has been placed in the Library. Information in respect of earlier years is not available.

Income from the sale of assets is available for re-use within the NHS.

Information is not available centrally on individual NHS trust and health authority forecasts of future income from the sale of assets, land and property.

Task Forces

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list all those task forces and policy reviews with external members established by his Department since May 1997 which have set up (a) sub-groups, (b) working parties and (c) other subsidiary committees, [79266]

Ms Jowell: Most task forces and reviews are short-term bodies established to give thorough consideration to important and difficult issues. Each establishes the working methods best suited to carrying out the work in the time available, and would normally provide a summary of its working methods in its report. Given the short term nature of task forces and reviews it is unlikely that many of them will set up sub-groups, working parties or subsidiary committees. However, this information is not available centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for all task forces and policy reviews with external members established by his Department since May 1997 (a) their dates of establishment, (b) those which have issued final reports and their dates of publication, (c) those which have been terminated and their dates of termination and (d) for those bodies still in existence, expected reporting and termination dates. [79284]

Ms Jowell: The reviews and taskforces, established since 1 May 1997 which have published their final reports are:

Review of cervical screening services at Kent and Canterbury Hospitals NHS Trust (established 23 June 1997; published 20 October 1997)

Review of the law relating to surrogacy (established 11 June 1997; published October 1998)

Strategic review of Health Services in London (established 20 June 1997; published 18 November 1997)

Review of the latest information available on inequalities in Health (established 11 July 1997, published 26 November 1998)

Review of the written consent requirements in the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Act 1990 (established 6 February 1997; published June 1998).

The reviews and taskforces, established since May 1997, which have yet to publish reports are:

Mental Health Act Review (established September 1998, estimated publication date autumn 1999)

Thoracic Surgical Services Review (established July 1998, estimated publication date May 1999)

United Kingdom Transplant Support Service Authority Review (established September 1998, estimated publication date May 1999)

Review of general anaesthesia and sedation with dental treatment (established October 1998, publication date to be decided)

Review of the wheelchair voucher scheme and the provision of electrical and indoor wheelchairs (established November 1998, estimated publication date Spring 1999)

Eight regional task forces to support the Waiting List Action Team (established November 1997, on-going activity with no final report expected)

NHS efficiency task force (established June 1997, on-going activity with no final report expected)

NHS task force on staff involvement (established March 1998, estimated publication date spring 1999)

A and E Modernisation Team (established in March 1999, first annual report due in April 2000)

Independent review of mobile phone use (announced 8 April 1999, terms of reference and membership to follow).

Normally termination of a review or task force coincides with publication of a final report. However, two are on-going activities from which no single final report is expected, and one (marked †) will continue to meet beyond the date of publication shown.

Schoolchildren

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the changes in the last five years in the average weight and height of schoolchildren in England and Wales; and if he will ist the changes in the last five years in the (i) consumption of (a) dietary carbohydrate and (b) refined sugar products and (ii) total calorie intake and average levels of exercise of schoolchildren. [78135]

Ms Jowell [pursuant to her reply, 26 March 1999, c. 424–25]: I regret that my previous answer contained incorrect information for 1995 for the weight of girls aged 11–15. I am also now in a position to provide the information on heights and weights for 1997 separately. The revised reply is as follows:

The heights and weights of primary schoolchildren were monitored in England between 1972 and 1994 by the National Study of Health and Growth (NSHG). No similar information is available for Wales. In 1995, the Health Survey for England (HSE) took over the monitoring of heights and weights of children and also measured their physical activity in 1997. The data for 1995 and 1996 were published in HSE Reports and the combined data for 1995–97 were published in December 1998 in the Report "The Health of Young People '95–'97".

The tables give heights and weights for 5 to 10 year olds for 1994 from NSHG and from HSE for 1995, 1996, 1997 and 1995–97 combined and on the same basis for comparison purposes with NSHG for 1995–97 combined. Heights and weights for children aged 11 to 15 years in 1995, 1996, and 1997 are given, along with the data for 1995–97 combined, which are the baseline from which changes will be monitored.

The extensive data on the types and levels of exercise among English schoolchildren in 1997 are given in tables 8.1 to 8.15 in the Report "The Health of Young People '96–'97". In Wales, the Youth Health Surveys carried out by Health Promotion Wales have shown that among 11 to 16 year olds, the proportion exercising for at least 4 hours per week outside school was 24 per cent. in 1994 and 29 per cent. in 1996.

There are no recent data on the consumption of dietary carbohydrate, refined sugar products, and total calorie intake of schoolchildren. However, fieldwork for the National Diet and Nutritional Survey of young people aged 4–18 years which covered Great Britain has been completed and the results are being analysed. This should provide data on all these factors and also on average levels of exercise. A report is expected at the end of this year.

HIV

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the anonymised programme of HIV surveillance in England and Wales, setting out for each survey currently in operation or planned (a) the location, (b) the targeted populations, (c) the clinical reasons for initial collection of specimens, (d) the number of specimen collection venues, (e) the annual specimen numbers, (f) the most recent prevalence data, (g) whether the consent of those tested was sought for entry into the survey and (h) whether those tested were informed that they were to be entered into the survey. [80695]

Ms Jowell: The Unlinked Anonymous monitoring programme monitors the prevalence of HIV infection in accessible groups of the population and is a unique source of unbiased prevalence data. An important aspect of the programme is that it estimates prevalent infections among groups in whom substantial proportions of infections remain undiagnosed and therefore unreported through other surveillance systems.

The data collected in the unlinked anonymised programme of HIV surveillance in England and Wales are published every year so that they can be used by those planning services or health promotion. Copies of the latest annual report "Prevalence of HIV in England and Wales 1997", annual report of the Unlinked Anonymous Prevalence Monitoring Programme and the summary report are available in the Library. Prevalence of HIV in England and Wales 1997, a summary of data to the end of 1997, is also available on the Department's internet site. These publications provide full information on the surveys which were carried out in 215 centres in 1997 throughout England and Wales. The tables summarise the main data requested on location, targeted populations, clinical reason for initial sample collection, number of specimen collection venues, annual specimen number and prevalence data.

With regard to obtaining consent for entry into the survey and informing patients about the surveys, posters and leaflets about the surveys are available in 15 different languages for participating centres to display and thus inform patients that their sample may be used in these surveys. These materials explain the aims of the UA surveys and that the programme is designed to ensure that the samples are anonymised before being tested and thus the results cannot be traced back to individuals. They also refer patients to healthcare workers for further information and explain that they can ask to exclude their samples from the surveys if they so wish, and that their wishes will be respected.

Macpherson Inquiry

Mr. Efford: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the implications for his Department of the Macpherson Inquiry recommendations; and if he will make a statement. [80532]

Ms Jowell: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to him by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office on 14 April 1999, Official Report, columns 239–40.

The Department has already set up a number of initiatives in the past two years on race equality issues and we are taking stock of these in the light of the publication of the Stephen Lawrence Inquiry report. In considering the implications of the Inquiry's recommendations, it will be important to develop a systematic response across Government and the Department is working with the Home Office and other Government Departments to take this forward.

Cancer Information

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what Government funding is available for publishing cancer information to (a) the public and (b) medical professionals; [80274]

(2) what proposals he has to publicise cancer care information on the internet. [80275]

Mr. Hutton: As part of the wider health information strategy, a Cancer Information Strategy is currently being developed which will streamline information sources. Areas for action identified include developing a core cancer information pack for patients, carers and other users; information requirements of primary care; and patient centred information systems. The new National Health Service Information Strategy and the Cancer Information Strategy will support the new NHS in its development of integrated care, in which the focus is on people and their needs rather than institutions.

The overall strategy will take some time to complete and initial work has started to specify the relevant components of the strategy and to identify the cancer information requirements for all user groups and will include a business case to justify the investment in information in relation to the benefits to be achieved. The Cancer Information Strategy Steering Group will be making an interim report in September.

Contraceptive Pills

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to inform the public of the decision by the Committee on the Safety of Medicines on the safety of the third generation contraceptive pill. [81035]

Ms Jowell: An announcement was made to the media on 7 April 1999 giving details of the outcome of the review by the Medicines Commission of "third generation" combined oral contraceptive pills, containing gestodene or desogestrel, and the risk of venous thrombo-embolism. Copies of the announcement have been placed in the Library.

Doctors and other family planning health practitioners were informed about the Medicines Commission via an Epinet message on 7 April. This included an information sheet for them to give to patients. The next edition of the bulletin Current Problems in Pharmacovigilance, which will appear on the Medicines Control Agency's web site, will also provide information for doctors and pharmacists.

Patient information leaflets supplied with third generation combined oral contraceptives containing the new advice are expected from mid-year onwards.

Multiple Sclerosis

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will commission research into the mechanisms of central fatigue in multiple sclerosis; [81343]

(2) what research his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into the impact of clinical psychology in the management of multiple sclerosis. [81344]

Ms Jowell: The Government fund health and medical research in a number of ways.

The Department funds research and development to support its work on policy development and evaluation in health and social care. The Department also manages the National Health Service research and development levy which is used to support research and development of relevance to the National Health Service in hospitals, general practice and other health care settings, and to fund the NHS research and development programme. In addition, the Medical Research Council (MRC)—which receives most of its income via grant-in-aid from the office of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry—funds medical research as part of the Government's funding of the science and engineering base.

Priorities for departmental research and development support for the development of policy are determined through discussion with policy colleagues, the Departmental Research Committee and Ministers. In the NHS R&D Programme, priorities take account of widespread consultation with those using, delivering and managing services, within a framework overseen by the Central Research and Development Committee for the NHS. In all cases, priorities for our budgets reflect analysis of the burden of disease, potential benefits, Government priorities and take account of the responsibilities and work of other funders.

Management of much of the research supported by the NHS R&D Levy is devolved and details of expenditure at project level are not collected routinely by the Department.

Project details of work directly funded by the Department or supported through the NHS R&D Levy can be found on the National Research Register (NRR). This is available in the Library and most medical libraries on CD Rom, and on the Internet: http://www.doh.gov.uk/nrr.htm. The NRR also contains many details of projects/trials funded by the MRC and other funders.

Within our programmes of research there is nothing specifically relating to clinical psychology or the mechanism of central fatigue.

The Department is currently considering work to look at care packages for those with multiple sclerosis, and has funded a study entitled "Health and independence through education: a controlled evaluation", which aims to assess the value of education in promoting health and independence for people with progressive neurological disorders such as MS.

We have asked those who manage the priority setting process to ensure that the mechanism of central fatigue in multiple sclerosis is included in consideration of future research priorities.

The Medical Research Council support for research into MS and associated demyelinating diseases was estimated at £640,000 in 1997–98. This work covered both basic and applied research.

In addition, the MRC funds a considerable amount of basic underpinning research in broad related areas such as immunology and cellular medicine.

The MRC always welcomes high quality applications for support into any aspect of human health and these are judged in open competition with other demands on funding. In addition, regional offices of the NHS Executive run response mode funding schemes to which applications of relevance to the NHS can be made. Awards are made by both the NHS and the MRC according to the scientific quality and importance of proposals.

Mental Health

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the rates of (a) schizophrenia and (b) depression among (i) Afro-Carribeans and (ii) the British white population. [81415]

Mr. Hutton: We are aware of research that shows that African-Carribeans are diagnosed as suffering from schizophrenia 3 to 6 times more often than the white population. Although the reasons for this are not clear cut, a recent survey published by the Policy Studies Institute showed the annual prevalence of non-affective psychosis was somewhat less than twice as high as the white population. Research also shows that the incidence of depression is probably under diagnosed for those from ethnic minorities. In 1994 the first national psychiatric morbidity survey revealed that about 1 in 7 adults aged 16–64 had suffered some sort of neurotic problem in the week prior to interview. The most frequent disorder was mixed anxiety and depressive disorder (71 per 1000).

Renal Services

Mr. Efford: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received regarding geographical inequality in renal provision; and what measures he plans to address the problem in the next three years. [81439]

Mr. Hutton: We have received a number of representations and are aware of the variations in provision. We acknowledge the concerns which have been expressed and we are taking steps to address them.

Centrally issued guidance on specialist commissioning and the National Priorities Guidance have both emphasised the need for health authorities and National Health Service trusts to review the existing provision of renal services and to plan for and to commission increased and equitable high-quality provision.

We are planning to issue guidance shortly which will be designed to provide further advice and assistance to health authorities and National Health Service trusts. This guidance will include information from a survey of renal services which is being carried out to ascertain the current position.

Mr. Efford: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received regarding the establishment of a national renal service framework; and if he will make a statement. [81441]

Mr. Hutton: A rolling programme of national service frameworks (NSFs) was launched in April 1998. The first two frameworks being developed are on coronary heart disease and on mental health; these will be followed by NSFs on older people (spring 2000) and diabetes (spring 2001).

The suggestion that renal services should be the subject of a national service framework was raised by representatives of the National Kidney Federation at their meeting last year with my noble Friend the Baroness Hayman. Since then, an Early Day Motion supporting this proposal has been tabled by the hon. Member for Oxford, West and Abingdon (Dr. Harris). There have also been twenty-one letters of support from hon. Members to Ministers. There are currently no plans for a national service framework for kidney disease. It is likely, however, that the diabetes NSF will look at some aspects of renal provision as renal failure is a complication of diabetes.

We will continue to work with the professional and voluntary groups concerned to look at ways in which we can develop and improve the provision of services for people with kidney disease.

Mr. Efford: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the projected increase in the next three years in the number of kidney patients (a) nationally, (b) regionally and (c) in Bexley and Greenwich District; and what steps he intends to take to meet such increases in demand. [81440]

Mr. Hutton: The provision of renal replacement therapy (dialysis and transplantation) for people with end-stage renal failure (ESRF) has increased year on year. From 1993 to 1995 the number of patients in England receiving treatment for ESRF rose by 20 per cent.—nearly 4,000 additional patients.

The projected increase in demand for such services is estimated at 9 per cent. per annum. Though this figure is not broken down by region, it is likely to be higher in areas where there is a high population of elderly people or a high proportion of people from ethnic minorities. A revision of the epidemiological needs assessment (published in 1994) will be issued soon, setting out the current level of need and taking ethnicity into account.

Guidance issued in October 1998 on commissioning arrangements for specialist services identified renal services as a priority, and emphasised the need for health authorities to plan on a long-term basis for the needs of their populations. In addition, a Health Service Circular on renal services will be published in the next few months; this will make clear the need for Health Authorities to review levels of renal services and to plan to meet the expected increase in demand.

Bexley and Greenwich Health Authority is a constituent member of the South East Thames Renal Steering Group. The group has carried out a study into the projected demand for renal services across the south east Thames area. Its work has resulted in the decision to open a satellite renal unit at Greenwich, and a further satellite unit at Lewisham is planned.

Organ Procurement

Mr. Efford: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received advocating the establishment of a transplant commission to review the organ procurement system; and if he will make a statement. [81442]

Mr. Hutton: We have received one representation from the Royal College of Surgeons. A College working party has reviewed the provision of organ transplantation in England and Wales, and in its report has recommended the establishment of a National Transplant Service. We are grateful to the Royal College of Surgeons for the work done by the working party in analysing the problems and producing its report which will be taken into account in the current review of the United Kingdom Transplant Support Service Authority. This review is wide-ranging and will be determining what central support transplant services require, including the issue of organ procurement, and how this is best delivered.

Health Records

Mr. Andy King: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the status is of a section 6(b) note in health records. [81492]

Mr. Denham: A note attached to a health record under section 6(2)(b) of the Access to Health Records Act 1990 does not alter anything in the record, but will form part of that survey in the same way as the existing information.

NHS Direct

Mrs. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the (a) number and (b) percentage of calls to NHS Direct which relate to back pain; and what advice NHS Direct has offered callers. [81609]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is not available centrally. However, each of the NHS Direct pilot sites will be able to provide relevant information for the area it covers.

Back pain can result from a variety of causes and the advice NHS Direct offers callers reflects clinically recognised best practice relating to the specific cause and symptoms of the back pain.

Food Poisoning

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on how many occasions his Department has used an emergency control order to respond to instances of food poisoning or contamination in each of the last five years. [81613]

Ms Jowell: I made an Emergency Control Order under Section 13 of the Food Safety Act 1990 on 20 May 1998. This was followed by two Amendment Orders on 20 May 1998 and 10 July 1998 respectively. No other Emergency Control Orders under this section of the Act have been made by Health Ministers in the last 5 years.

Cancer Centres

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the (a) designated and (b) accredited regional cancer centres, indicating the date of designation and accreditation in each case. [81731]

Mr. Hutton: Early implementation of the Calman/Hine Report reflected the different staring points in regions of the National Health Service and allowed the designation processes to fit local circumstances. There are currently no rigid criteria for the designation or accreditation of cancer centres. We are in the process of developing a set of common national standards and performance measures against the new performance framework which will apply across the country.

The following is a list of cancer centres by region with the date of designation where available.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will place in the Library a copy of the report of the working group on breast screening set up by the Chief Medical Officer in October 1998. [81735]

Mr. Hutton: The Chief Medical Officer set up a working group in October 1998 to assess the workforce pressures in the breast screening programme and to identify possible means to address the pressures. The group has now made a report to the Chief Medical Officer who is considering this and the issue of future publication.

Ms Jowell: The withdrawal of Advanced Corporation Tax has had no effect on employer contributions in the National Health Service Pension Scheme. I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Northavon (Mr. Webb) by my then right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 14 July 1997, Official Report, column 1.

Ms Jowell: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to him on 10 March 1999, Official Report, column 300. The figures for 1998–99 will be available towards the end of the year.

Immigration Services Tribunal

Sir Nicholas Lyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the (a) costs of setting up and (b) annual running costs of the Immigration Services Tribunal and its staff; what provisions have been made to meet such costs; and what plans he has for designated professional bodies to contribute towards these costs. [81403]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Details of the costs of setting up and the annual running costs of the Immigration Services Tribunal and staff are contained in the Regulatory Impact Assessment which was published at the same time as the Immigration and Asylum Bill. Schedule 6, paragraph 5(1) of the Bill enables the Secretary of State to prescribe by order fees for the registration or continued registration of persons on the register. There are no plans for designated professional bodies to contribute to these costs.

Immigration Services Commission

Sir Nicholas Lyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what level of fee he plans to be payable by those applying to be registered with the Immigration Services Commission under paragraph 5 of schedule 6 of the Immigration and Asylum Bill; by what criteria the level of the fee will be fixed; and on what basis each scale of fees will be determined. [81404]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: An estimate of level of fee to be paid by those applying to be registered with the Immigration Services Commissioner is contained in the Regulatory Impact Assessment which was published at the same time as the Immigration and Asylum Bill. The criteria for fixing the fee level will be based on the full economic costs of providing the service to those who are required to register and will reflect the level of activity which the Commissioner and his staff devote to them.

Sir Nicholas Lyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the (a) start-up costs and (b) annual running costs of the office of the Immigration Services Commissioner and staff; and what provisions have been made to meet such costs. [81402]

Powers for the Immigration Services Commissioner to require the payment of fees from designated professional bodies and for the Secretary of State to prescribe fees for registration or continued registration are contained in clause 65(7) and schedule 6, paragraph 5(1) of the Immigration and Asylum Bill.

Young Offenders Institutions

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many children from each local unitary authority in Wales were in young offenders' institutions in each of the past 10 years. [81333]

The available statistics, shown in the table, relate to persons who were first committed to custody under sentence by a court from Wales and initially received into a Young Offender Institution in England and Wales.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment takes place by probation officers in preparation for a home detention curfew; and if he will make a statement. [81561]

Mr. George Howarth: The Probation Service contributes to the risk assessment conducted by the prison to establish the suitability of an offender to participate in the Home Detention Curfew (HDC) scheme. Probation staff advise on the suitability of the prisoner and on the proposed curfew address. The Probation Service will consider whether the participation of the offender in the HDC scheme would be likely to present an unacceptable risk to the victim, others living at the proposed address or the public; whether there is a pattern of offending which indicates an unacceptable risk of re-offending during the HDC period; or whether there is a probability of failure to comply with the conditions of the curfew.

Guidance to the Probation Service on HDC is set out in Probation Circulars 44/1998 and 82/1998, copies of which are in the Library.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average age of (a) probation officers and (b) probation service officers in each of the last three years. [81560]

Mr. George Howarth: The Home Office does not collect information on the ages of probation staff on a routine basis. However, a survey was held on 1 November 1998 to collect some limited information on the age structure at that time. The results for the 51 areas that responded are shown in the tables.

Anti-terrorism Measures

Mr. Peter Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent assessment he has made of the appropriateness of anti-terrorism measures taken in public places; and if he will make a statement. [81438]

Mr. Straw: The joint Home Office/Northern Ireland Office consultation paper "Legislation Against Terrorism", which was issued on 17 December last year, examined the powers available under existing counter-terrorist legislation, including the measures available for use in public places. The use made of these measures in a particular area is the operational responsibility for the relevant Chief Officer of police.

The consultation paper concluded that the current powers under the Prevention of Terrorism Act (1989) allowing the police in Great Britain to stop, question, search and arrest (including at ports) for terrorist purposes should for the most part be retained in the proposed permanent United Kingdom wide counter-terrorist legislation—though with some possible modifications. The paper also flagged up that, depending on the security situation at the time, new counter-terrorist legislation might also need to include additional temporary measures extending only to Northern Ireland. If this were the case, these additional measures would be phased out as soon as the security situation allowed.

The consultation period for the "Legislation Against Terrorism" consultation paper ended on 16 March this year. We are analysing the responses. It is envisaged new counter-terrorist legislation will be introduced when a suitable legislative opportunity arises.

Rape

Mr. Hesford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to publish the report on the study initiated by his Department into the processing of rape cases by the criminal justice system; and if he will make a statement. [81436]

Mr. Boateng: The report is nearing completion and we hope to publish it in July 1999.

Perjury

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many convictions have been secured for the crime of perjury in the last 12 months. [80378]

Mr. Boateng: Information taken from the Home Office Court Proceedings Database show that in England and Wales in 1997, (latest available) there were 238 defendants prosecuted for offences of perjury of whom 173 were convicted.

Immigration and Nationality Directorate

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to provide additional storage space for files being dealt with by the Case Allocation Unit in the Immigration and Nationality Directorate. [80772]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We intend to transfer some non-active files from storage accommodation in Croydon to Acton. The space made available will meet all the foreseeable needs of the Case Allocation Unit. We expect the exercise to be completed by the end of May.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the throughput of files by the Case Allocation Unit planned for in the new organisation of immigration and asylum caseworking; and what is the throughput achieved according to the most recent figures available. [80773]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: No firm projections of throughput of files by the Case Allocation Unit were made.

During the week ending 9 April, the Case Allocation Unit received 2,865 files and despatched 1,338. This was an unusually low throughput due to the Easter holiday period.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the average daily number of (a) callers trying to make a call to the Immigration and Nationality Directorate, (b) calls made to that Directorate and (c) calls answered by the Telephone Caller Unit. [80780]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Figures for calls made during normal working hours in February and March are as follows:

(a) Average number of callers per day: 5,240

(b) Average number of calls per day: 47,046

(c) Average number of calls answered per day: 1,690

Note that many calls are repeat calls.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many visits he and his Ministers have made to the Immigration and Nationality Directorate at Croydon in the last year. [80781]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Home Secretary has visited the Immigration and Nationality Directorate (IND) four times during the past year: on 14 September 1998, 18 February 1999 and 23 March 1999. He is planning to visit IND again shortly.

I have visited IND eight times during the last year, on 11 June 1998, 14 September 1998 and on 11 February, 3 March, 11 March, 23 March, 31 March and 13 April 1999.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what change in the level of productivity was planned for in the reorganisation of caseworking in the Immigration and Nationality Directorate; and what level of productivity is currently being achieved. [80777]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Immigration and Nationality Directorate's Private Finance Initiative contract with Siemens Business Services measures productivity as reduction in unit costs. The contract with Siemens assumes that unit costs reductions of more than 40 per cent. can be achieved when the new computer system is introduced to support the new modern ways of working. Delivery of the computer system has been delayed and the recent reorganisation of caseworking has been planned on a unit cost reduction of 32 per cent.

A unit cost reduction of 15 per cent. was achieved prior to the recent disruption caused by the business change and modernisation initiative which was also part of the Public Finance Initiative project. Unit costs for the year ending February 1999 had reduced by between 3 per cent. and 4 per cent. Unit costs for February 1999, in which output was badly affected by the disruption, were 28 per cent. higher than pre-contract levels.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects the joint team established by the Home Office and Siemens Business Services on 17 March to report. [81467]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Project Team has reported its proposals for addressing the operational recovery of the Integrated Casework Directorate, which have been approved. The project team is continuing its work.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department by how much the backlog in the asylum casework of the Immigration and Nationality Directorate has grown (a) in the last year and (b) in the last three months for which figures are available. [80770]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The estimated number of applications for asylum awaiting an initial decision rose by 20,340 in the 12 months between March 1998 and February 1999 to 71,295. In the three months between December 1998 and February 1999, the figure rose by 10,405.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many staff were planned for the Telephone Caller Unit of the Immigration and Nationality Directorate under the reorganisation of caseworking; and what is the average number of staff currently manning the Telephone Caller Unit. [80778]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Immigration and Nationality Enquiry Bureau deals with both telephone and written inquiries from members of the public and with specialised inquiries from other Government departments and local authorities. The original complement of the unit, which assumed that the full information Technology system would be available, was 64. This was revised to 94 for the period of Team Based Caseworking. There are currently 83 staff in post. The average number of staff manning the telephones each day during March was 40.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many meetings he and Ministers in his Department have held with Siemens plc in connection with the reorganisation of caseworking in the Immigration and Nationality Directorate in the last year. [80779]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Home Secretary and I have had four meetings with Siemens plc during the last year.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) on what date it was planned that (a) the Public Caller Unit and (b) the Asylum Screening Unit would move from Lunar House to the Whitgift Centre; and when it is now planned that these moves will take place; [80774]

(2) what factors underlay his decision to delay the move of the Public Caller Unit and the Asylum Screening Unit from Lunar House to the Whitgift Centre. [80775]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Public Caller Unit (PCU) commenced its planned phased move to the Whitgift Centre on Monday 1 February and completed the move on Friday 12 February. The Asylum Screening Unit (ASU) was originally scheduled to close in Lunar House on Friday 5 March and open in the Whitgift Centre on Monday 8 March.

During the initial transition phase to the Immigration Casework Directorate, the PCU experienced a large increase in the numbers of callers which continued after the PCU's move to the Whitgift Centre. In order to deal with these increased numbers additional temporary accommodation in Lunar House has been used by the PCU since Wednesday 10 March. Because of this, the planned move of the ASU to the Whitgift Centre was put on hold while the situation was reviewed.

Following the review, it was agreed that additional improved queuing facilities for callers to the PCU and ASU should be provided. Additional staff for the PCU and ASU will also be provided in order to deal with the expected numbers of callers attending these units each day. It is now planned that the ASU will close in Lunar House on Friday 30 April and open in the Whitgift Centre on Tuesday 4 May. The PCU will close its additional accommodation in Lunar House on Friday 28 May.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of when the backlog of asylum casework in the Immigration and Nationality Directorate will be cleared. [80768]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Government are committed to reducing the Immigration and Nationality Directorate casework backlog to frictional levels by 2001. Our plans for dealing with Immigration and Nationality Directorate casework backlogs are set out int he Government's White Paper, "Fairer, Faster and Firmer—A Modern Approach to Immigration and Asylum."

Former Yugoslav Nationals

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of those persons, including dependants, who entered the United Kingdom under special arrangements for vulnerable individuals from former Yugoslavia (a) in September 1992 and (b) between November 1992 and August 1995 have subsequently (i) voluntarily left the UK, (ii) remained in the UK and (iii) applied for settlement in the UK. [80776]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I regret that the available statistics do not separately identify these persons from other nationals of the former Yugoslavia and the information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

United Nations International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many representations he has received on the Government's non-ratification of the Optional Protocol of the UN International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights; [80833]

(2) when the Government intend to ratify the Optional Protocol of the UN International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights; and if he will make a statement. [80832]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: There are two Optional Protocols to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights. My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary announced on 3 March 1999, Official Report, columns 756–57, that the United Kingdom would sign and ratify the Second Optional Protocol relating to the abolition of the death penalty. The Ambassador in New York accordingly signed the Protocol on 31 March and we shall ratify it shortly. The Home Secretary also announced that the Government had concluded that the United Kingdom should not ratify the First Optional Protocol relating to the right of individual petition, but that we would look at this again once the Human Rights Act has been fully implemented.

We have received one parliamentary question from my hon. Friend the Member for Tooting (Mr. Cox), nine parliamentary questions from the noble Lord, Lord Lester of Herne Hill and a letter from the Director of Amnesty International relating to the decisions announced on 3 March. We have received no other correspondence from the public or Members of Parliament about the announcement.

Cleveland Police

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set up an inquiry into the circumstances of (a) the recent departure of the former Deputy Chief Constable of Cleveland Police Force with particular reference to the role of (i) senior management of the Police Force and (ii) the Cleveland Police Authority and (b) the former Deputy Chief Constable's subsequent appointment as Deputy Commissioner of the Royal Turks and Caicos Islands police force; and if he will make a statement. [81488]

Mr. Boateng: I do not believe that any useful purpose would be served by setting up a separate inquiry into the retirement of the former Deputy Chief Constable of Cleveland Police. The former Deputy, Mr. Turnbull, exercised his right to retire from Cleveland Police and he retired on 7 March 1999. Mr. Turnbull's appointment as Deputy Commissioner of the Royal Turks and Caicos Islands Police Force is entirely a personal matter between him and that force.

Immigration Act 1971

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average time taken by him to determine an application by a person with limited leave under the Immigration Act 1971 to enter or remain in the United Kingdom for further leave in each of the last five years. [81462]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Excluding asylum-related cases, the average time taken to decide applications for further leave to remain to remain was:

Year	Days
1994	43
1995	45
1996	45
1997	46
1998	49

This includes applications decided on the day in the Public Enquiry Offices.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons were detained under the authority of an immigration officer under paragraph 16(2) of Schedule 2 of the Immigration Act 1971 in each of the last five years; and how many of such persons were detained for (a) more than one week and (b) more than one month. [81464]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The information requested is only available at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many directions have been given under (a) paragraph 8(1)(a) and (b) and (b) paragraph 8(1)(c) of Schedule 2 of the Immigration Act 1971 in each of the last five years; [81466]

(2) how many cases he has referred to (a) an adjudicator and (b) an appeal tribunal under the provisions of section 21 of the Immigration Act 1971; and in how many such cases he has subsequently varied a decision in favour of an appellant. [81468]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons were (a) charged and (b) convicted of offences under section 26(1)(d) and (g) of the Immigration Act 1971 in each of the last five years. [81471]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Data on the number of people charged by offence are not collected centrally.

Information taken from the Home Office Court Proceedings Database on the number of convictions by offence is given in the table.

Number of persons convicted at all courts for offences[1] under sections 26(1)(d) and 26(1)(g) of the Immigration Act 1971, England and Wales, 1993–97

	Offence
	Section 26(1)(d)	Section(1)(g)
1993	3	—
1994	8	—
1995	7	—
1996	5	—
1997	3	—

[1] Principal immigration offence

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons appealed against the destination specified in directions for their removal following refusal of leave to enter under section 17(1)(a) of the Immigration Act 1971 in each of the last five years; and how many of such appeals were allowed. [81473]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The available information is that, in 1993, two appeals against the destination specified in directions for their removal following refusal of leave to enter under section 17(1)(a) of the Immigration Act 1971 were heard, neither of which were allowed; in 1994, eight were heard, none of which were allowed and in 1996 two were heard with none allowed. No such appeals were heard in 1995 and 1996.

I regret that information on how many appeals in this category were lodged is not centrally recorded and could be obtained only by examination of individual case records.

Asylum Seekers (Vouchers)

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what research he has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into the administrative and other costs of local authorities providing support for asylum seekers by way of vouchers; and what assessment he has made of the average cost per voucher in relation to the nominal value of the voucher. [81472]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Although we have had discussions with some local authorities about the voucher schemes they are operating, these schemes have all been individually devised and are usually based around a branch of one of the major supermarket chains. They bear no comparison, therefore, with the commercially administered nationwide scheme which we have proposed and it would, therefore, have been an unmerited use of resources to have conducted detailed research into the administration and costs of these schemes. The Home Office voucher scheme will be subject to competitive tender, which will help to bear down on costs.

Deportation

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many recommendations for deportation were made by courts in cases where an offender received (a) a community sentence, (b) a sentence of less than four years imprisonment and (c) four years or more imprisonment in each of the last five years for which figures are available. [81475]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Information taken from the Home Office Court Proceedings Database is given in the table.

Number of persons sentenced at all courts to (a) a community sentence and (b) immediate custody where the court also recommended deportation, England and Wales, 1993–97

	Main disposal
		Immediate custody by length of sentence:

1997	—	17	297

[1] Includes probation order, supervision order, community service order, attendance centre order, combination order and curfew order (since 1995)

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many offenders were recommended for deportation by a court following convictions for (a) offences involving the possession or supply of illegal drugs or trafficking in drugs, (b) offences involving violence and (c) sexual offences in the most recent year for which figures are available; [81507]

(2) how many offenders were recommended for deportation by (a) a magistrates court and (b) a Crown court in the most recent year for which figures are available. [81506]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Information taken from the Home Office Court Proceedings Database is given in the table.

Number of offenders recommended for deportation by the courts by type of court and type of offence, England and Wales, 1997

Type of court/offence	Number
Court for all offences

Supplying or offering to supply a controlled drug	7
Having possession of a controlled drug	3
Having possession of a controlled drug with intent to supply	14
Violence against the person offences	12
Robbery	2
Sexual offences	10

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many deportation orders have been made against persons as belonging to the family of another under section 3(5) of the Immigration Act 1971 where that other person had been recommended for deportation by a court in each of the last five years. [81474]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The information requested is available only at disproportionate cost.

Telephone Kiosks (Prostitutes' Cards)

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to publish his consultation paper on dealing with advertising by prostitutes in public telephone kiosks. [81672]

Mr. Boateng: The Home Office hopes to publish its consultation paper on new measures to tackle the problem of prostitutes' cards in telephone kiosks next month. The consultation paper will look at options for changing the law to enable those who put cards in telephone kiosks to be dealt with more effectively.

Kosovan Refugees

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to use the former RAF base at Sopley to accommodate Kosovan refugees; and if he will make a statement. [81690]

Mr. Straw: None at this stage. The Government's priority remains to ensure that as far as possible, Kosovan refugees receive protection in the region so that they can return easily to their homes when it is safe for them to do so. However, I announced on 20 April that we have agreed to a request from the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to accept a group of vulnerable refugees, mainly women and children, from Macedonia.

Reception centres will be staffed by the Refugee Council and will provide temporary accommodation for refugees prior to their moving into more permanent accommodation. The Refugee Council is liaising closely with local authorities through the Local Government Association. They are currently looking at accommodation throughout the United Kingdom that could be used for reception centres.

Variation of Leave Applications

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consultations he has carried out regarding the rights of appeal of a person with limited leave applying for a variation of leave; and what representations he has received on this subject. [81465]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Consultation Paper on the Review of Appeals contained details of our proposals regarding rights of appeal for persons with limited leave applying for a variation of leave. We received no comments on these specific points in the responses to the Consultation Paper.

Asylum Applications (Waterloo)

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many foreign nationals claimed asylum at Waterloo Station in (a) 1997, (b) the first two months of 1998 and (c) 1998. [81463]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: In 1997, 2,235 applications for asylum were lodged at Waterloo Station. In 1998, 2,820 were made at the same port, of which 210 were made in January 1998 and 205 in February 1998.

Immigration (Written Undertakings)

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many written undertakings in respect of support for persons entering the UK were signed in 1997–98; [81469]

(2) how many persons in respect of whom a written undertaking had been given by another accepting responsibility for their maintenance and accommodation applied for asylum in the UK in each of the last five years. [81470]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The information requested is not available.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Kennedy Report

6. Ms Osborne: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the progress he is making towards the implementation of the Kennedy report. [80347]

Mr. Nick Brown: I announced on 26 March that new arrangements along the lines recommended by Professor Kennedy are expected to be in operation by April 2001. We also plan to launch a pilot scheme or schemes by April 2000.

CAP Reform

10. Ms Keeble: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the impact which reform of the CAP will have on the consumer. [80352]

Mr. Nick Brown: CAP reform should result in significant savings for consumers, of the order of £1 billion a year in aggregate when all the changes have worked through. The average family of four will save £65 per year provided the likely reductions in market prices are passed to retail.

25. Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the reform of the common agricultural policy in connection with farmers' incomes. [80368]

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the effect on farmers of the CAP reform package agreed at the Berlin summit. [80369]

Mr. Morley: The reform package will increase the market orientation of European agriculture and assist producers in their efforts to improve the competitive position of their businesses. In the short term, before these adjustments take place, there may be a negative impact on aggregate incomes of the order of 5 per cent. But in the particularly hard pressed beef sector, incomes have been fully protected.

27. Mr. Luff: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the impact of the final outcome of the negotiations on reform of the common agricultural policy on the competitiveness of UK dairy farming. [80370]

Mr. Morley: The competitiveness of UK dairy farming will depend on the ability of producers to adjust to the new market situation. However, the agreement preserved the milk quota system and as long as this remains UK dairy farmers will be prevented from competing freely on world markets.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the Agenda 2000 CAP Reform consultation exercise. [82167]

Mr. Nick Brown: I have today sent to interested organisations an information document entitled "CAP Reform Agreement" which summarises the outcome of the negotiations on the CAP reform package of Agenda 2000. It also includes an economic note on the likely effect of the reforms upon producers, taxpayers and consumers, and a summary of responses to the consultation exercise received to date. A further consultation will be undertaken on the implementation of the agreed CAP reform measures when detailed regulations and details of available Community funds are known.

I have also made available today two consultation documents which stem from the agreement on CAP reform on which early preparatory action is necessary. The first, "Rural Development Regulation: Consultation on Implementation in England", seeks views on mechanisms for drawing up and operating seven year rural development plans. We will be asking for comments on who should prepare plans, on the geographic areas they should cover and on who should operate them.

The second, "Supporting the Hill Farmer", seeks views on how we should support farming in the Less Favoured Areas in future. Since the Agenda 2000 reforms have changed the basis on which LFA support can be provided, we will be replacing our Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowances scheme. We hope this consultation document will stimulate a wide debate on how we should design a new and better framework of support for our hill farmers.

I shall be placing copies of these documents in the Library of the House today.

Pig Industry

11. Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the state of the pig industry. [80353]

Mr. Morley: Market prices for pigs have improved since the turn of the year, but remain below costs of production. The Government will continue to do all they can to help, while recognising that pigs are traded in a relatively free market with limited opportunity for direct Government involvement.

Fishing Industry Charges

12. Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish tables on levels of charges faced by the fishing industry in the United Kingdom relative to the European fishing industries. [80354]

Mr. Morley: We do not have the necessary information about the level or nature of charges to the fishing industries of other Member States to enable us to make the comparisons requested.

Food Standards Agency

13. Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will waive the proposed Food Standards Agency fee for food shops of less than 1,000 sq ft retail area. [80355]

Mr. Rooker: We are still considering the large response we have received on our proposals and will not reach any final decisions on the scope or operation of the levy until we have completed our assessment.

15. Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects the Food Standards Agency to be fully operational. [80358]

Mr. Rooker: The timetable depends on when the necessary legislation can be completed. We would hope the Agency to be established in the first half of next year.

Krebs Trial Areas

14. Mrs. Organ: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the progress of the survey in the Krebs trial areas in Gloucestershire and Herefordshire. [80357]

Mr. Rooker: Surveying has been completed. The area to be proactively culled will be randomly chosen very soon, and we shall be ready to cull after the end of the closed season.

Food Safety (EU)

16. Mr. David Davis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about food safety regulations in other parts of the EU. [80359]

Mr. Rooker: Food safety is an area of EU competence. Most food law is harmonised across the EU and rules equivalent to those in place in the UK apply in other Member States. The Government see this as the best way to promote common food safety standards across the EU.

Genetically Modified Foods

18. Mr. Syms: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about Government health studies into genetically modified foods. [80361]

Mr. Rooker: All genetically modified (GM) foods are subject to a full and rigorous safety assessment before they are approved for sale. To underpin this process, the Department has a research programme with a current budget of £1 million per annum.

21. Mr. Grieve: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the environmental implications of genetically modified food. [80364]

Mr. Rooker: The environmental implications of genetically modified foods are considered in accordance with the provisions of the EC Directive for the Deliberate Release into the Environment of Genetically Modified Organisms (90/220/EEC).

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what safeguards are in place to ensure that consumers have adequate information on genetically modified foods. [80350]

Mr. Rooker: EC Regulation 1139/98, which came into force on 1 September 1998, requires all foods containing genetically modified (GM) ingredients produced from GM soya and maize to be labelled. This sets a precedent for the labelling of all future GM novel foods.

Genetically Modified Crops

19. Mr. Blunt: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about scope for cross-pollination of genetically modified crops. [80362]

Mr. Morley: We believe the best way to avoid problems arising from cross-pollination is for extra care to be taken when these crops are grown on the farm. We are encouraging the industry to draw up voluntary guidelines including separation distances between GM and other crops. Non-compliance with the separation distances would lead to withholding of GM seed by the supplier.

Lowland Farmers

20. Mr. Brady: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the regulatory costs incurred by lowland farmers in England. [80363]

Mr. Morley: Costs incurred by individual farms will vary. Our aim is to keep regulatory costs to the minimum necessary to safeguard public, plant and animal health, the environment and the public funds.

Fishing Industry

22. Mrs. Humble: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last held discussions with representatives of the fishing industry. [80365]

Mr. Morley: I last met the major representative bodies in the fishing industry on 24 March, prior to the 30 March Fisheries Council in Brussels.

Bovine Tuberculosis

23. Ms Lawrence: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures have been taken to combat TB in cattle. [80366]

Mr. Rooker: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Stroud (Mr. Drew) on 4 March 1999, Official Report, column 911.

Milk Marque

24. Mr. Robathan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has recently received from dairy farms regarding the position of Milk Marque. [80367]

Mr. Morley: My right hon. Friend the Minister receives regular representations from dairy farmers about a range of issues affecting dairy farming, including the position of Milk Marque.

Meat and Bone Meal

Mrs. Dean: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the regulations governing the disposal of meat and bone meal. [80360]

Mr. Rooker: The disposal of waste MBM is controlled under Part II of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 to ensure protection of the environment and human health. The Environment Agency is responsible for the enforcement of these controls and we are confident of their effectiveness.

Bumblebees

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the effect on horticulture of the decline in the numbers of bumblebees. [80617]

Mr. Rooker: No formal assessment has been made but I have no evidence to suggest that growers face any difficulties. As my hon. Friend will know, bumblebees are widely used for the pollination of protected crops, particularly glasshouse tomatoes.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Access to Justice Bill

Mr. Beith: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what equal opportunities impact assessment under the Government guidelines set out in Policy Appraisal for Equal Treatment has been made of the Access to Justice Bill; if he will publish the assessment; and if he will make a statement. [81555]

Mr. Hoon: The Government guidelines were issued only after the reform proposals had been settled and the White Paper published. To undertake a single impact assessment of the Access to Justice Bill as a whole would be impracticable because the Bill establishes broad frameworks within which detailed policies will be developed and implemented. We believe a more practicable way forward is to conduct assessments, where appropriate, as individual policies are developed and implemented. This will not only provide more focused assessments, but ensure they occur nearer in time to implementation.

Queen's Counsel

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list for this year's appointments to Queen's Counsel (a) the average and (b) the highest number of unsuccessful previous applications made by applicants. [81481]

Mr. Hoon: The average number of unsuccessful previous applications made by applicants for Queen's Counsel in 1999 was 3.7. The highest number of unsuccessful previous applications by an applicant for Queen's Counsel in 1999 was 26.

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department for this year's appointments to Queen's Counsel (a) what was the total number of applications, (b) what was the number of successful applicants and (c) of (a) and (b), how many were (i) women, (ii) from ethnic minorities, (iii) below the age of 38 years, (iv) over the age of 50 years and (v) solicitors. [81482]

Mr. Hoon: For this year's silk round the figures were as follows:

Total number of applications: 553

Number of successful applicants: 69

Number of successful female silk applicants: 9

Number of successful ethnic minority applicants: 5

Number of successful applicants below the age of 38: 1

Number of successful applicants above the age of 50: 3

Number of successful solicitor applicants: 1.

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list for this year's appointments to Queen's Counsel (a) the highest figure and (b) the average figure given as the gross fee income (i) by successful applicants for Queen's Counsel, (ii) by unsuccessful applicants for Queen's Counsel and (iii) by all applicants for Queen's Counsel. [81483]

Mr. Hoon: The highest and average figure given as the gross fee income (i) by successful applicants for Queen's Counsel, (ii) by unsuccessful applicants for Queen's Counsel and (iii) by all applicants for Queen's counsel for this year's silk round were as follows:

	Highest	Average
Successful	550,000	224,304
Unsuccessful	790,000	165,897
All	790,000	173,184

Rights of Audience

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement about future rights of audience in the higher courts of (a) members of the Crown Prosecution Service, (b) the proposed Community Legal Service and (c) the proposed Criminal Defence Service. [81571]

Mr. Hoon: The Government will seek to amend the Access to Justice Bill to ensure that full rights of audience in the higher courts are exercisable by lawyers employed by the Crown Prosecution Service, the Community Legal Service and the Criminal Defence Service, subject to individual lawyers satisfying the qualification requirements and rules of conduct of the appropriate authorised body. The Government will seek to reinstate clauses defeated in the House of Lords which provided rights of audience in the higher courts for employed advocates, and enabled the Legal Services Commission to provide criminal defence services through its own employees. They will also seek to amend Clause 33 to provide rights of audience to employees of bodies established and maintained by the Legal Services Commission.

Duty Solicitor Schemes

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what assessment he has made of the value for money of duty solicitor schemes. [81568]

Mr. Hoon: We are constantly reviewing the cost effectiveness of provision of all criminal defence services to ensure that they provide the best possible value for money in terms of quality and price. In addition to assessing all claims from suppliers for duty solicitor services before payment, the level of standby payments is adjusted so that payments relate as closely as possible to the amount of business undertaken by the duty solicitor. From next year all criminal advice and assistance, including the duty solicitor schemes, will be provided under contract. New arrangements for providing duty solicitor services at early first hearings in the magistrates' courts are being tested in a pilot scheme. These arrangements have been monitored and are currently being evaluated.

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has for the future of existing duty solicitor schemes; and what steps he intends to take to ensure the continuation of 24-hour cover for criminal defendants. [81567]

Mr. Hoon: It is our intention to continue to provide advice and assistance in broadly the categories for which it is currently available. These categories include advice and assistance provided by duty solicitors at police stations and magistrates' courts. Regulations will make express provision under the Access to Justice legislation.

Census Returns

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the hon. Members with whom, since 1 October 1998, the Lord Chancellor's Department or the Public Record

Office have corresponded concerning public access to the 1921, 1951 and 1961 census returns, indicating the contents of the correspondence. [81557]

Mr. Hoon: Since 1 October 1998, the Lord Chancellor's Department and the Public Record Office have corresponded with the following hon. Members concerning public access to the 1921, 1951 and 1961 census returns: the right hon. Member for North-West Cambridgeshire (Sir B. Mawhinney), my right hon. Friend the Member for Chesterfield (Mr. Benn), the right hon. Member for Skipton and Ripon (Mr. Curry), the right hon. and learned Member for Sleaford and North Hykeham (Mr. Hogg) and the hon. Member for South Suffolk (Mr. Yeo). In each case the hon. Member was forwarding one or two letters from constituents. There was a total of eight letters from constituents.

The constituents' letters asked when the current instruments prescribing 10 year extended retention periods for the census returns for 1921, 1951 and 1961 were next due for renewal. They also asked whether confirmation could be given that the census returns were not at present closed to public inspection for 100 years under the provisions of Lord Chancellor's Instrument 12 of 1966. The replies stated that the Lord Chancellor's Instruments were due for renewal as follows: 1921 census in 2006, 1961 census in 2001 and 1951 census in 2006. The replies also stated that these census returns were closed to public inspection for 100 years by Lord Chancellor's Instrument 12 of 1966.

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department where the grounds for a 100-year closure period for decennial census returns are set out. [81562]

Mr. Hoon: The grounds for a 100-year closure period for decennial census returns are set out in the White Paper "Open Government" of 1993 (Cm 2290). This assigned a 100-year closure period for decennial census returns on the grounds that they consist of documents supplied in confidence, the disclosure of which would constitute a breach of good faith.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

New Deal (Young People)

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how each of the nine measurements of performance for the new deal for young people is calculated. [81692]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The majority of the nine Core Performance Measures will be calculated using data from the Employment Service, Research and Development Division's New Deal Evaluation Database. We have issued already some initial figures for the first measure showing the numbers of participants who joined the New Deal in April 1998 moving into subsidised and unsubsidised jobs. Methods of calculation for the remaining Core Performance Measures are still being refined.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what the final month of the intensified gateway of the new deal for 18 to 24-year-olds will involve. [81694]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Proposals for more intensive activity in the final month of the Gateway are currently being considered. Action is likely to include a proactive review at the end of the third month of the Gateway, coaching, and an increased emphasis on referrals to jobs and places on the Options before the end of the Gateway period.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will give details of the strategy being developed to improve the new deal for young people. [81691]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Continuous improvement in the New Deal is a key priority, allowing us to build upon the excellent progress that has been made so far in helping young people into jobs. To further improve the New Deal, a wide ranging strategy has been developed. Key elements include the Core Performance Measures which will monitor performance at a local level and achieve improvement through partnership action plans and the Innovation Fund—worth £5 million to back local innovative projects with scope to improve performance. The Government have indicated that they will particularly welcome bids against the Innovation Fund to intensify and enhance the New Deal Gateway and to improve the performance of New Deal in meeting the needs of the most disadvantaged young people.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to his answer of 18 March 1999, Official Report, column 757, on Employment Service staff, how many of the young people taken on by the Employment Service from the New Deal are (a) subsidised and (b) unsubsidised; at what cost; and how many are involved in New Deal support functions. [81641]

Mr. Andrew Smith: A total of 342 people have been recruited into the Employment Service under the Government's New Deal programme between April 1998 when the programme commenced and 31 March 1999. Of these recruits the employer subsidy has been claimed for 286, the remaining 56 are unsubsidised. The total cost of the subsidy claimed for the period to 31 march 1999 is £322,875.

The large majority of ES's recruits under New Deal are employed in local offices where they are employed in an administrative capacity. This is a multifunctioning role which will involve them in a range of Jobcentre activities. A proportion of their time may therefore be spent on administrative work supporting the ES's New Deal functions.

LEA Funding

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list by local education authority the funds received per pupil from all the initiatives launched and managed by his Department since May 1997, listing separately funds received from (a) standards fund initiatives and (b) other initiatives including capital funds. [80691]

Ms Estelle Morris: The funding per pupil for all education initiatives announced by the Department of Education and Employment since May 1997 is listed for each local education authority in the following table. The figures for the Standards Fund do not include those Grants for Education Support and Training announced prior to May 1997 but paid in the 1997–98 financial year. Grant maintained school pupils are included in the Standards Fund from April 1999. The Standards Fund figures include contributions from local education authorities. The per pupil figures in the table represent an average for each local education authority across all phases and types of school. The initiatives have not been disaggregated to take account of the particular types of school or pupil that they are aimed at. The amount per pupil for Standards Fund will depend on several local factors, such as the level of grant successfully bid for and accepted by a local education authority. Grants other than Standards Fund grants include nursery education grant paid in respect of children attending private, voluntary and independent providers of nursery education within the relevant local education authority area. However, these children are not included in the pupil count used to derive the per pupil figures in column (b).

Classroom Tuition

Mr. Stringer: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will estimate the average number of hours a Year 7 pupil in a local education authority school spent receiving tuition in the classroom in (a) 1978–79, (b) 1988–89 and (c) 1998–99. [81715]

Ms Estelle Morris: I am unable to provide my hon. Friend with an estimate of the average number of hours a Year 7 pupil spent receiving tuition in the classroom as the data is not available for the years specified. However, Circular 7/90 recommends minimum levels of time that pupils are taught in schools which for Years 7 to 11 pupils is 24 hours per week.

WALES

Mental Health Services

Ms Julie Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what advice he has given to Welsh health authorities regarding mental health treatment for members of (i) black and (ii) other ethnic minority communities. [80196]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: When issuing advice to the health sector on mental health issues the Welsh Office is providing either a legally binding direction; action that requires a specific response; information or guidance or examples of good practice. These categories are equally applicable across mental health service users irrespective of cultural or ethnic background.

We are aware of the issues around mental health and ethnicity and shall consider the needs of ethnic minority patients when drawing up our plans for future Strategies on both child and adolescent and adult mental health services.

Following the transfer of functions, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

CAP Reform

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the consequences of CAP reform in Wales for the (a) beef, (b) sheepmeat and (c) dairy sectors. [80847]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: The Department has been undertaking research into the potential effects of the Agenda 2000 reforms. It appears, from the preliminary analysis, that the beef sector should benefit, as increased subsidies and decreased feed costs (a consequence of the reform of the cereals regime) are expected to outweigh price reductions.

There are no specific reforms for the sheepmeat sector. However, the sector will benefit from the decreased price of feedstuffs. On the other hand, reductions in the price of beef will increase competitive pressures and are expected to lead to a cut in market prices for sheepmeat. This will be offset by increased Sheep Annual Premium payments. It is unclear at the moment what the net effect will be.

Dairy sector reforms will not be implemented until 2005.

These estimates are taken from work in progress and do not make allowances for restructuring or for movements in exchange rates.

Atypical Anti-psychotic Drugs

Ms Julie Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the efficacy of new atypical anti-psychotic drugs in the treatment of mental health. [81382]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: All products that have been licensed will have had their efficacy assessed by the Medicines Control Agency.

Ms Julie Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will meet mental health groups to discuss the prescribing of atypical anti-psychotic drugs for mental health patients. [81381]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: I am always willing to consider specific requests for meetings with mental health groups.

Following the transfer of functions, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Ms Julie Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what advice he has given to health authorities regarding the prescribing of atypical anti-psychotic drugs for mental health patients. [81380]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: WHIN No. (98)13 issued on 1 December 1998 and WHN No. (99)1 issued on 7 January 1999 both related to the withdrawal of the product Serdolect (sertindole). I shall place a copy of these notices in the Library of the House as soon as possible.

Capping

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he proposes to use his capping powers for 1999–2000; and if he will make a statement. [82136]

Mr. Michael: In line with our Manifesto commitment to abolish crude and universal capping, I decided not to announce capping limits in advance for 1999–2000. This left councils and police authorities in Wales to make up their own minds on their budgets taking account of their local circumstances, including the impact on council tax, and the views of local people.

The average Band D council tax bill in Wales has increased by 8.5 per cent. or £47 to £602. Overall, the reaction to the 1999–2000 local government revenue settlement has been measured and responsible. I have therefore decided not to cap any authorities this year.

The National Assembly for Wales will inherit my present capping powers in respect of 2000–01 and later years, although it is planned to replace these powers with the new reserve powers to limit council tax and precepts which are contained in the Local Government Bill.

Authorities in Wales should bear in mind that the Assembly will be able to look back at increases in budgets since 1998–99 in deciding whether and how to use the new reserve powers in future years.

Cadw

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what targets he has set for Cadw: Welsh Historic Monuments Executive Agency. [82137]

Mr. Michael: Cadw has been set the following key targets for 1999–2000:

1. To complete 90 per cent. of the approved conservation maintenance programme.
2. To complete 80 resurveys.
3. To resolve 75 per cent. of ad hoc listing cases within 17 weeks.
4. To complete 120 scheduling actions, of which at least 90 per cent. involve additional protection.
5. To resolve 80 per cent. of listed building consent cases within 4 weeks and 90 per cent. of cases in 7 weeks.
6. To resolve 75 per cent. of scheduled monument consent cases within 13 weeks and 90 per cent. of cases within 17 weeks.
7. To resolve 80 per cent. of historic buildings grant applications in 18 weeks.
8. To resolve 80 per cent. of ancient monument grant applications within 6 weeks.
9. To pay 90 per cent. of properly presented claims for historic buildings and ancient monuments grants within 5 weeks of receipt.
10. To achieve a market share of 63 per cent. of the number of visitors to the top twenty heritage sites in Wales.
11. To reduce direct net cost per visitor at Cadw's sites to an average of 25 pence.
12. To operate within allocated programme and running cost budgets.
13. To achieve efficiency gains of at least 2 per cent.

Full details of Cadw's performance against targets for 1999–2000 will be published in the Agency's Annual Report.

Lobbyists

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans (a) he and (b) Welsh Office Ministers have to attend (i) meetings and (ii) functions with lobbyists and public relations organisations between 6 and 20 May. [81734]

Mr. Michael: None.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Freemasons (CPS)

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Attorney-General, pursuant to his answer of 22 March 1999, Official Report, column 2, on membership of the freemasons within the CPS, what was the total number of lawyers invited to declare their masonic status; and if he will break down the total between (a) masons, (b) non-masons, (c) those who refused to indicate their status and (d) those from whom no reply was received. [81794]

The Attorney-General: Disclosure forms were sent in September last year to 2,097 lawyers. Nine declared that they are freemasons (although two of these declared themselves to be lapsed members); 1,096 declared that they are not freemasons; 133 declined to make a declaration; and 859 did not return the form.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Independent Commissioner for the Holding Centres

Mr. Salter: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when she intends to publish Sir Louis Blom-Cooper's Sixth Annual Report as Independent Commissioner for the Holding Centres. [82305]

Marjorie Mowlam: I have today arranged for copies of Sir Louis Blom-Cooper's Annual Report for 1998 to be placed in the Library.

I welcome the Report and am glad to note that, again, the Commissioners have found nothing untoward in the care and treatment of detainees held in the custody of uniformed officers of the RUC.

The Government and the Chief Constable of the RUC look forward to the day when the Holding Centres are no longer needed; I keep the position under regular review, in conjunction with the Chief Constable.

Meantime, I have reappointed Sir Louis and Dr. Bill Norris as Commissioner and Deputy Commissioner respectively. The reappointments will run from 1 April 1999 nominally until 30 September 2000, subject to review.

I am grateful to Sir Louis and Bill Norris for their work. I shall study their recommendations carefully and respond as soon as possible.

Pre-school Places (Disabled Children)

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what priority will be given to children with disability in the allocation of pre-school places. [81417]

Mr. McFall: Under new admissions arrangements which are being introduced from September 1999 as part of our Pre-School Education Expansion Programme, my Department has encouraged schools to continue the traditional practice of allocating nursery places for children with special needs, including disability, in each session within their approved pre-school enrolment number. In addition, children with Statements of Special Educational Needs can be admitted to nursery schools and classes over and above the school's pre-school enrolment number, based on the advice of Education and Library Boards.

Liver Disease

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if the Royal Belfast Hospital for Sick Children has a gastroenterology service to care for patients with liver disease. [81497]

Mr. McFall: The Royal Belfast Hospital for Sick Children does not presently provide a gastroenterology service but the position is under review. However, a visiting outpatient (outreach) service is available at the Royal Belfast Hospital for Sick Children by a team based at Birmingham Children's Hospital. Gastroenterology clinics are held monthly and liver clinics held quarterly.

Biliary Atresia

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many cases of biliary atresia have been identified in Northern Ireland in each of the last five years. [81496]

Mr. McFall: The number of deaths and discharges from hospitals in Northern Ireland where the primary diagnosis was congenital biliary atresia during the last five years are given in Table 1.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many Kasai operations have been carried out by the Royal Belfast Hospital for Sick Children on babies suffering from biliary atresia each year for each of the last five years; how many such procedures have been successful; and how many children on whom the procedure has been used are alive with their own livers. [81495]

Mr. McFall: One kasai operation was performed in each of the years 1994, 1995 and 1996 with three operations carried out in 1997 and two in 1998. All eight children who have had kasai operations are alive. Two of these children have subsequently had liver transplants and a third is on the transplant waiting list. Six of the eight children are currently alive with their own livers.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Kosovar Albanians

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how much money the Government have made available to the UN High Commissioner for Refugees for emergency relief to the Kosovar Albanians. [81903]

Clare Short: Between April 1998 and March 1999, the Government allocated £1.5 million to United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) for emergency relief in Kosovo and the region. In recent weeks, we have focused on providing practical assistance to UNHCR to strengthen its in-country capacity and facilitate the movement of relief supplies into the region. Since 30 March, we have provided UNHCR with 22 airlifts to Skopje and Tirana for relief goods and personnel, and a convoy of five trucks and drivers has arrived in Tirana to support their relief operations in Albania. At UNHCR's request, we have sent specialist personnel and equipment to Tirana airport to help handle the relief flights, and we are providing a similar package for Skopje. We have also offered to provide public information and security specialists to support UNHCR's operations in the region.

Refugee Fund Supplies (Macedonia)

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what proportion of the food supplied to the Albanian refugees in Macedonia is purchased within Macedonia; and what plans she has to enable the proportion to be increased. [81924]

Clare Short: Our policy is to support the procurement of local goods and services where this is possible, cost effective, and when it would not harm the local economy or reduce access of the local host population to essential supplies. Detailed information about food purchases by international agencies in Macedonia is not currently available.

SCOTLAND

Fishing

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what is his estimate of the value of each salmon taken by an angler visiting Scotland to the Scottish economy in each of the last 10 years; [81220]

(2) what is his estimate of the value of salmon angling to the economy of Scotland in each of the last 10 years; and of this how much in each year represents spending by visitors from outside Scotland. [81221]

Mr. Macdonald: Information on the amount spent by visiting anglers is not held centrally. However, a survey published in 1991 by Portsmouth Polytechnic's Centre for Marine Resource Economics estimated that the net economic value of rod fisheries in Scotland lay within the range of £198 million to £300 million, with a best estimate of £225 million. The "Scottish Salmon Strategy Task Force" report, published in 1997, uprated these figures to produce an estimate for 1995 values of a range from £270 million to £430 million, with a best estimate of £350 million.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the number of (a) salmon and grilse and (b) sea trout eaten per seal in Scottish waters in each of the last 10 years. [81218]

Mr. Macdonald: Recent studies in the rivers Dee and Don suggest that common seals may eat several hundred salmonids per annum. However, extrapolation from these observations to calculate consumption per seal over the last 10 years is difficult as consumption rates and composition are likely to have changed.

Studies on the impact of seals on salmonid stocks are ongoing in the rivers Tay and Conon.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Seals

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the minimum number of (a) grey seals and (b) common seals required to maintain a viable population in Scottish waters. [81216]

Mr. Macdonald: The minimum number required to maintain a viable population will vary according to a range of factors. Advice in 1998 from the Natural Environment Council's Special Committee on seals indicated that there is evidence that the rate of increase in pup production in some grey seal colonies has been slowing down, although it is too early to predict equilibrium sizes. Common seal populations have recovered from the viral outbreak in the 80s which reduced numbers dramatically, but are nevertheless more dependent upon changes in local prey abundance than grey seals.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

CABINET OFFICE

Teenage Pregnancies

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office when he expects to publish the Social Exclusion Unit report into teenage pregnancies. [81968]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister plans to publish the report shortly.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Genetically Modified Crops

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of ways in which the biotechnology industry could use less exacting regulatory systems elsewhere in the EU in order to gain legal rights within the UK for (a) field trials (b) commercial growing and (c) produce distribution in respect of genetically modified crops. [81076]

Mr. Meacher: The regulatory control of the release and marketing of GMOs is governed throughout the EC by Directive 90/220/EEC. This has been transposed into UK law through Part VI of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 and the Genetically Modified Organisms (Deliberate Release) Regulations 1992, as amended 1995 and 1997. All Member States are required to implement the Directive fully.

The Committee of Competent Authorities for the Directive meets regularly to exchange information on implementation with a view to securing even application of the Directive throughout the EC. Therefore the regulatory systems in all EU member states should operate to similar standards.

All consents for GMO releases for the purposes of research, such as field trials, are issued at national level. For any field trial to be carried out in the UK, a consent must be issued by the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions.

The commercial growing and distribution of GM produce require specific consents to be issued at the Community level under Directive 90/220/EEC. All Member States participate and can raise objections in this decision-making process. Once an approval has been issued, it may be used throughout the Community, provided any specific conditions on use or on types of environment and geographical areas for release are complied with.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will publish (a) an updated version of Table 1 of Appendix 4 of the report of the European Communities Committee of the House of Lords of Session 1997–98 (HL 11-I p57–8) concerning the regulation of genetic modifications in agriculture, stating in addition, in respect of each application, the policy of Her Majesty's Government and (b) a similar list of applications considered by (i) the EU Commission and (ii) a Council Committee, which were disapproved. [73721]

Mr. Meacher: An updated version of the table is available on my Department's website. The volume of information requested is such that I will send my hon. Friend a copy of the table that includes the additional information requested.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the occasions in (a) the Regulatory Committee of the European Commission and (b) the Council of Ministers when approval for genetically modified crops for (1) experimental and (2) commercial purposes was granted; when the representatives of the United Kingdom (A) expressed disapproval of any such application and (B) (i) voted against and (ii) abstained, on any occasion when approval for that application has been obtained by qualified majority of opinion, together with the nature and origin of the application concerned. [73722]

Mr. Meacher: Approvals for experimental releases of genetically modified organisms (GMOs) are determined nationally.

To date, only one application to place GMOs on the market has been given approval where the UK authority objected. The case, under Part C of Directive 90/220/EEC, concerned a genetically modified maize modified for insect resistance and herbicide tolerance. The UK had no objection to the marketing of this product for seed production but voted against its unrestricted use as proposed by the Commission. Full details are contained in the table referred to in my reply to my hon. Friend given today.

A30 (Woodleigh Junction)

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when work will commence on the A30 Woodleigh Junction. [81967]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Subject to the successful completion of the remaining statutory procedures, work on the A30 Woodleigh Junction Improvement could start early next year.

Road Building

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many road building schemes using the design, build, finance and operate contracting method are currently (a) completed and (b) under construction; what is the estimated cost to public funds for each project over the life time of the DBFO contract; and if he will make a statement. [81897]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Eight DBFO contracts encompassing 11 trunk road schemes have been awarded and 10 of the schemes are now open to traffic. The A30 Honiton-Exeter Improvement scheme which forms part of the A30/A35 Exeter to Bere Regis project is still under construction.

The estimated cost of each project over the lifetime of the contract is represented by the Net Present Value (NPV) range of the shadow tolls. The actual payments are dependent on traffic volumes on the road. The published details are as follows:

£ million

Project	NPV range
M1-A1	186 to 281
A419/A417	106 to 124
A69	58 to 66
A19	125 to 149
A30/A35	129 to 158
A50	58 to 72
M40	155 to 210

Regional Development Agencies

Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which chairpersons, chief executives and board members of the regional development agencies have since 1979 (a) had a political affiliation with a party, and which one, (b) donated more than £1,000 to a political party, and to which one, (c) donated more than £1,000 to persons in a political party, and to whom, and (d) have confirmed that (i) they and (ii) the companies they represent have had no off-shore funds; and if he will make a statement. [81922]

Mr. Caborn: Political allegiance played a part in the appointment process only in the case of the local authority members on the Boards of the regional development agencies (RDAs). The table provides details.

Donations made to a political party or to persons in a political party are a personal matter for the individual. The Chairmen, Board Members and Chief Executives of the RDAs have not been asked to declare any such donations.

RDA Members are required to declare and register an interest in an off-shore fund only if that interest is relevant to their Board responsibilities. No such declarations of interest have been made.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Atlantic Frontier

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport from whom he received advice concerning the possible inclusion of the Atlantic Frontier on the list of World Heritage sites to be put forward to UNESCO; what the advice was; and what the reasons were for not including the Atlantic Frontier in his list. [81618]

Mr. Alan Howarth: The responsibility for considering this suggestion rested with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland. My right hon. Friend was advised by Scottish Natural Heritage that the data presented by Greenpeace were weak, particularly in respect of cetaceans, where the distribution claimed tended simply to reflect recording effort. The UK continental shelf proposal will be reconsidered when the tentative list is reviewed in five years' time.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what quantities of plutonium contaminated wastes were (a) stored and (b) disposed of at (i) Sellafield and (ii) Dounray in each of the last three years. [81498]

Mr. Battle: These are matters for BNFL and the UKAEA respectively, and I have asked the chairman of each organisation to write to my hon. Friend with the information he requires and to place a copy of his reply in the Library of the House.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what notice is given to other states of the shipment from the United Kingdom of cargoes of (a) high-level radioactive waste, (b) plutonium and (c) MOX nuclear fuel. [81945]

Mr. Battle: We are not required to give any notice of such shipments. To date, there have been no shipments by sea from the UK of High Level Waste. However, in the case of shipments by sea of High Level Waste from France to Japan undertaken by BNFL as transport operator, it has been our practice since 1996 routinely to inform coastal states, both on and off route, in advance and on a confidential basis. We intend to continue with this practice in the case of the forthcoming sea shipment of MOX fuel from Sellafield, consistent with our international obligations to protect information about the movement of sensitive nuclear materials. As far as I am aware, there have been no shipments of civil separated plutonium by sea from the United Kingdom since the late 1970s. Shipments by air from the United Kingdom of nuclear materials are carried out fully in accordance with our obligations under national and international aviation regulations.

Genetically Modified Foods

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many meetings (a) he and (b) the Minister for Science have held to discuss genetically modified foods. [70439]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 11 February 1999]: Neither I nor my noble Friend the Minister for Science have held any meetings specifically to discuss genetically modified food policy.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the preparedness of the insurance industry to provide the relevant professional indemnity insurance to consultants employed on millennium compliance projects. [80056]

Ms Hewitt: I have been asked to reply.

None. It is for insurers themselves to decide whether they are prepared to offer cover.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Ministerial Meetings (US)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 18 March 1999, Official Report, column 793, how many times Ministers in his Department met their counterparts in the US Administration between 1 January 1998 and 1 June 1998, indicating the dates and locations of each meeting, the Ministers involved and the name of the US counterpart. [80829]

Mr. Timms: None.

Professional Statisticians

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many staff who have worked as professional statisticians in his Department and its predecessors have left on early retirement in each of the past 10 years. [81177]

Mr. Timms: One statistician from this Department has taken early retirement in the last nine years. Information is available only going back nine years.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many staff by grade are employed as professional statisticians in his Department; how many of these staff have been accepted as fast stream by the Civil Service Selection Board; and how many have been granted chartered statistician status by the Royal Statistical Society. [81199]

Mr. Timms: Statistical work is undertaken by a range of specialists such as Research Officers, Social Survey Officers and Economists. Within this Department, there are three Senior Civil Servants, one Grade 6, 16 Grade 7s, and 16 Assistant Statisticians employed as "professional" Statisticians, all of whom have been recruited via Civil Service Selection Board. In addition, our Department employs seven Statistical Officers.

Our records do not show which of the Departmental statisticians have been granted chartered statistician status by the Royal Statistical Society.

Note:

These figures do not include any staff who are not in post for example on career breaks or secondments.

Performance-related Pay

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many Benefits Agency staff have their pay linked to performance in respect of (i) benefit clearance times, (ii) benefit accuracy, (iii) weekly benefit savings from detected fraud and (iv) any performance measurements. [81695]

Mr. Timms: The administration of the Benefits Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Peter Mathison. I have asked him to write to my right hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Frank Field, dated 22 April 1999:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking how many Benefits Agency staff has their pay linked to performance in respect of (i) benefit clearance times, (ii) benefit accuracy, (iii) weekly benefit savings from detected fraud and (iv) any performance measurements.

Under the current Benefits Agency Performance Pay Scheme a proportion of an officers pay is determined by their annual performance appraisal rating. Appraisal ratings are determined by two factors:

success in meeting up to six key work objectives and the demonstration of a number of competencies, for example communication skills reasoning and intellect, and resource management.

Each year, key work objectives are agreed by an officer and their line manager. Benefit clearance times, benefit accuracy, weekly benefit savings from detected fraud, and other performance measures, may appear within one or more of the key work objectives.

Unfortunately specific information of the numbers of staff who have one or more of these measures included in their key work objectives is only available at disproportionate cost.

I am sorry that, on this occasion, I could not be of more help.

Benefit Fraud

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of prosecutions were successful (a) of all prosecutions for benefit fraud, (b) of prosecutions for benefit fraud under the Theft Acts and (c) of prosecutions for benefit fraud under the Social Security Acts, in (i) 1996–97, (ii) 1997–98 and (iii) 1998–99. [81698]

Mr. Timms: Benefits Agency operational matters are the responsibility of the Chief Executive, Peter Mathison, I have asked him to reply to my right hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Frank Field, dated 22 April 1999:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent parliamentary question asking what proportion of prosecutions were successful (a) of all prosecutions for benefit fraud, (b) of prosecutions for benefit fraud under the Theft Acts and (c) of prosecutions for benefit fraud under the Social Security Acts, in (i) 1996–97, (ii) 1997–98 and (iii) 1998–99.

The attached table, Table 1, provides the requested information for prosecutions successfully concluded by the Benefit Fraud Investigation Service (BFIS) and the Benefit Agency Security and Investigation Service (BASIS) in England and Wales.

An average of 5–10% of cases brought to court are withdrawn, acquitted, dismissed or found not applicable. This accounts for the number of successful prosecutions being less than 100%. BASIS prosecutes under various Acts in addition to the two referred to above, for example the Forgery and Counterfeiting Act.

I am unable to give you the information in the format requested for Scotland as the Procurator Fiscal is not obliged to provide information to the Agency about the legislation under which charges are brought or what those charges were. I have therefore given you the overall percentage of successful prosecutions by BFIS in Scotland. This is shown in Table 2.

The Benefit Agency Security Investigation Service, in Scotland, was successful in prosecuting 100% of the cases submitted to the Procurator Fiscal in 1997/8. Figures available for 1998/9 indicate that BASIS in Scotland submitted and had accepted for prosecution 90 cases of which 25 have already been successfully concluded.

I hope you find this helpful.

Attendance and Disability Living Allowances

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will change the Attendance Allowance and Disability Living Allowance rules which apply when someone is admitted to hospital. [82306]

Mr. Bayley: We propose to change the rules for Attendance Allowance (AA) and Disability Living Allowance (DLA) so that the day of admission to hospital is treated as a day out of hospital, in place of the existing rules which treat such a day as a day in hospital. This will mean that people who spend frequent spells in hospital, eg for respite care, can gain an extra day's benefit. It will mean that the rules for AA/DLA will be brought into line with other Social Security benefits.

Regulations governing the withdrawal and downrating of benefits on admission to hospital have existed since the beginning of the National Insurance scheme in 1948. The reduction in benefit reflects the fact that, in hospital, the National Health Service is providing free care and maintenance. Regulations currently do not define what is a day in, or a day out of hospital. This leads to uncertainty. Social Security Commissioners have taken varying positions over the years. This has resulted in differing rules being developed according to the type of benefit in payment, creating difficulties for both customers and staff.

A Commissioner's decision made in 1996, which affected only AA and DLA, directed that both days of admission to, and days of discharge from hospital, should be treated as days in hospital. This means that benefit can now be lost on both the days of admission and discharge. For other Social Security benefits the current policy and practice is that the day of admission is treated as a day out of hospital and the day of discharge as a day in hospital.

We have concluded that the best way forward, to avoid further inconsistencies and confusion, would be to align the AA and DLA rules on hospital admission with the rules for other Social Security benefits. For the avoidance of doubt, we will make it explicit within the legislation that the day of admission is a day out of hospital and the day of discharge a day in hospital. Regulations will be laid at the earliest opportunity.

HOME DEPARTMENT

IND Offices, Croydon

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases there have been for the years (a) 1997, (b) 1998 and (c) 1999 to date of the IND offices in Croydon losing passports lodged with them. [81682]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Statistics relating to the number of passports lost in the Immigration and Nationality Directorate are not recorded centrally. Information kept centrally is in respect of the number of compensation claims dealt with as a result of maladministration, the majority of which will have arisen as a result of lost documents. The figures for the years since 1997 are as follows:

	Number
1997	41
1998	63
1999 to date	24

Prison Service

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 21 January 1999, Official Report, column 556, if the Prison Service has completed the short review on recruitment to the Prison Service; and if he will publish the conclusions. [81637]

Mr. George Howarth: The report of the review is nearing completion and will be submitted shortly to the Prison Service's director of personnel.

The report is not being written with a view to publication, but it will inform discussions with senior managers about possible new policy initiatives.

Asylum Seekers (Former Yugoslavia)

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will consider lifting visa requirements for those leaving the Former Republic of Yugoslavia. [81900]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: No; but where United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees have arranged for medical and humanitarian evacuation for evacuees from Kosovo, the normal visa requirements will be waived.

Kosovar Albanians

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Kosovar Albanians will be evacuated from Macedonia to the UK; what criteria will be used as to who will qualify; what protection they will receive, and for how long; and where they will be housed. [81902]

Mr. Straw: The primary aim of the Government is to care for refugees in the region, and to facilitate their return to Kosovo. We are working together with our European Union and North Atlantic Treaty Organisation partners and with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR).

We have long made it clear that we stand ready to respond to requests from UNHCR to take vulnerable refugees from Kosovo on a temporary basis. We have agreed with UNHCR that any recommendations for evacuation from the region should be co-ordinated through the office of the UNHCR. UNHCR will assess the desirability of temporary protection in the United Kingdom, will give priority to medical cases, other vulnerable persons and in support of family unity and make recommendations to the Home Office for consideration.

I announced on 20 April that arrangements had been agreed for the admission of 120 evacuees, mainly women and children, expected in the next few days. This decision was made following advice from UNHCR that the refugees were deemed to be vulnerable and in need of temporary protection outside the region.

People arriving under the UNHCR programme will be granted permission to enter in line with close family members already settled in the United Kingdom or 12 months' exceptional leave to enter to provide for their protection as requested by UNHCR.

I have tasked the Refugee Council with putting in place a special reception service for refugees arriving under the UNHCR programme. Under the plans, people will arrive in the United Kingdom through selected airports and will be placed in reception centres across the United Kingdom. The reception centres will be staffed by the Refugee Council and will provide temporary accommodation for refugees prior to their moving into more permanent accommodation. The Refugee Council is liaising closely with local authorities through the Local Government Association.

Freemasons

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he has taken since 23 March to accelerate the process of establishing voluntary registers of membership of freemasonry in police forces in England and Wales; and how many police forces have now indicated that they have specific plans for introducing such registers. [81792]

Mr. Boateng: On 1 April, the Home Office wrote at official level to the Association of Chief Police Officers (ACPO) requesting that ACPO write to each Chief Constable in England and Wales to ask them to set up voluntary, internal registers for their forces. ACPO duly wrote to each Chief Constable on 7 April. It is too early to say how many Chief Constables will set up such registers. However, an earlier ACPO survey of Chief Constables' views indicated that the overwhelming majority of Chief Constables supported in principle their creation.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 23 March 1999, Official Report, columns 177–78, when he now expects numerical data on freemasons within the police and other parts of the criminal justice system to be available. [81793]

Mr. Boateng: As soon as the voluntary internal registers which all Chief Constables in England and Wales have been asked by the Association of Chief Police Officers to put in place have been established, we will be able to make available for statistical purposes such numerical data as these registers reveal, on an ongoing basis. We anticipate that the first useful information will be available by October this year.

Arrangements for other categories of occupation under Home Office responsibility, including release of data for statistical purposes, will be determined once the internal registration arrangements for the Police Service have been set up and are in operation.

Police Authorities

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to increase the proportion of elected representatives on police authorities in England; and if he will make a statement. [81849]

Mr. Boateng: The Government have no plans to change the proportion of elected representatives on police authorities. The elected representatives (councillor members appointed by local councils) have a majority of one over the combined total of magistrate members and independent members. I am satisfied that these non-elected members have skills and experience which are of benefit to police authorities. Police authorities have been established in their present form only since 1995, and some of them have had to re-form themselves as a result of local government reorganisation. I do not think it would be helpful to subject them to further change at this time.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Secondary School Admissions

Mrs. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) how many representations he has received from parents in Havering concerning secondary school admission for September; [81610]

(2) what powers he has under the School Standards and Framework Act 1998 to require admission authorities to take part in consultation over secondary school admission arrangements with the local education authority; [81611]

(3) what powers he has under the School Standards and Framework Act 1998 to ensure that, in cases where a local education authority operates catchment areas for secondary school admission, all primary schools within the local education authority fall within a catchment area. [81612]

Ms Estelle Morris: To date, we have received 25 letters from parents in Havering not offered their preferred secondary school place for September 1999. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State could intervene only in an admissions issue where he is satisfied that a local education authority or governing body has acted unlawfully or "unreasonably", that is, in a way which no sensible authority or governing body would have acted. Our investigation of these complaints found no grounds for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's intervention.

Section 89 of the 1998 Act and its accompanying regulations place a new requirement on all admission authorities in an area to determine their admission arrangements in consultation with each other, taking account of local circumstances. Where an admission authority disagrees with another's proposed admission arrangements, it can object to the Adjudicator. We believe that school admissions arrangements are best determined at local level. Havering local education authority is responsible for consulting on and determining the arrangements for all county schools. The 1998 Act also requires my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to issue a code of practice on admissions. The School Admission Code of Practice, which came into force on 1 April 1999, offers guidance on all aspects of the school admissions process, including consultation.

Under the 1998 Act and the Code, it is for admission authorities to decide on their admission arrangements—including whether to operate catchment areas and what those areas should be—subject to consultation, and to the results of any complaint to the Adjudicator.

School Expulsions

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many year 11, 10 and 9 pupils were expelled from schools in London and the South East over the last three years and for the first quarter of 1999. [81169]

Ms Estelle Morris: The information is not available in the form requested. However, the number of permanent exclusions for pupils aged 13, 14 and 15 is shown in the following table.

Academic year (age as at 31 August)

	1994–95			1995–96			1996–97
	15	14	13	15	14	13	15	14	13
London	329	564	435	395	607	473	366	590	435

Professional Statisticians

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many staff who have worked as professional statisticians in his Department and its predecessors have left on early retirement in each of the past 10 years. [81186]

Mr. Mudie: The number of "professional statisticians" who have left on early retirement in the last 10 years is five, including one medical retirement.

Year	Number
1994	2
1996	2
1997	1

"Professional statisticians" have been defined as those staff who were recruited as fast streamers to the Statistician Group via CSSB.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many staff by grade are employed as professional statisticians in his Department; how many of these staff have been accepted as fast stream by the Civil Service Selection Board; and how many have been granted chartered statistician status by the Royal Statistical Society. [81206]

Mr. Mudie: Statistical work is undertaken by a range of specialists including Research Officers, Social Survey Officers and Economists. Within this Department, there are 6 Senior Civil Servants, 25 Grade 7s and 16 Assistant Statisticians employed as "professional" statisticians. In addition, our Department employs 6 Statistical Officers.

"Professional statistician" has been defined as those staff who were recruited as fast streamers to the Statistician Group via CSSB. By this definition it follows that all of those staff have been accepted as fast streamers.

Of those listed, 1 member of the SCS and 4 Grade 7s have been granted chartered statistician status by the RSS.

Consultations (Postal Costs)

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will pay the postal costs of voluntary bodies and registered charities requested to respond to Government consultation documents; and if he will make a statement. [80923]

Mr. Mudie: The Department follows the Cabinet Office best practice guidance on consultations. We seek to make it as easy as possible for people to respond and will always consider providing a freepost address for responses to large-scale consultations involving the general public and the voluntary sector. We also make increasing use of dedicated email addresses which offer a very low cost alternative to postal responses.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Dr. Vis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what the value was of the (a) funds administered by the TECs and (b) overheads of the TECs in the last year for which figures are available. [81882]

Mr. Mudie: Based on the 1997–98 consolidated annual statutory audited accounts of 73 English TECs, the value of the government funds administered by the TECs was £1,455 million and overheads of the TECs were £178 million.

Personal Advisers

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what (i) general training is provided for personal advisers on New Deals and (ii) specific training is provided for personal advisers assisting (a) young people, (b) lone parents, (c) people with disabilities and (d) older people. [77541]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Responsibility for the subject of this question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its Chief Executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Leigh Lewis to Dr. Lynne Jones, dated 23 April 1999:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State for Education and Employment has asked me to reply direct to your question regarding: (i) the general training provided for personal advisers on New Deal and (ii) specific training provided for personal advisers assisting (a) young people, (b) lone parents, (c) people with disabilities and (d) older people. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

All Employment Service staff, including Personal Advisers, have access to a comprehensive range of training covering all the knowledge and skills they need to do their job. The amount of training a Personal Adviser will require is dependent on their role and responsibilities, their previous experience and their existing level of knowledge and skills.

As an indication only, if a person was recruited to undertake basic advisory duties and had no previous knowledge of Employment Service business, they would require a minimum of 23 days training to be considered as having a basic level of competence. However, this does not include consolidation, assimilation and experience, all of which are crucial elements of the development of advisory knowledge and skills. This training includes job-broking, communication, interviewing and caseload management skills, knowledge of Employment Legislation, Jobseeker's Allowance and other benefits, including In-Work Benefits, Employment and Training Opportunities and the use of our IT systems.

In addition to the general training, if Advisers were to undertake specialist Advisory duties, for example, New Deal Adviser for People with Disabilities, they would require anything between 2 days and 6 weeks further training.

I will deal with the training provided for the specific types of New Deal Personal Advisers in the order that you have raised them.

a] Young People: 18–24 years

The general training described above gives the Personal Advisers the skills and knowledge to deal with this client group.

b] Lone Parents

In addition to the basic level of training detailed above, which Advisers have before attending a New Deal for Lone Parents Adviser training programme, Advisers are provided with an additional 27 days of training. This specific programme covers all the unique knowledge and skills required to understand and advise this particular client group. This includes:

an overview of the issues and problems of lone parents (provided by external organisations NCOPF, Gingerbread & The Daycare Trust;)

new business processes and cultural requirements;

detailed benefits and allowances training;

advanced interviewing, presentational, marketing & representational skills.

c] People with Disabilities

As before, the amount of training required will be dependent on an Adviser's previous experience and their current level of competence. If they have not previously been a Disability Employment Adviser they will need 5 weeks of training as described below—Block A and Block B. People who have already had the 3 week training for DEAs—Block A, would only need the 2 week New Deal specific event—Block B.

Block A training includes:

non-directive employment related counselling skills;

issues and problems faced by people with new or long standing disabilities—delivered by external organisations;

disability awareness, eg. mental health, learning disabilities, hearing and visual impairment, epilepsy—delivered by specialist speakers such as RNIB and RNID.

Block B New Deal specific training includes:

working in partnership and cultural requirements;

employability measures and issues for gaining, retaining and sustaining employment;

holistic approaches and medical conditions—provided by an external speaker; presentation and representational skills.

d] Older People—25+

New Deal Personal Advisers dealing with the 25+ age group would have an additional 2 day event including eligibility, client self-marketing, identifying and submitting to suitable vacancies/other provision and follow through.

50+

This is a new initiative. Work is currently being undertaken to establish the training needs of the Personal Advisers dealing with this group.

You may also be interested to know that all training given to New Deal Personal Advisers has been designed to help them achieve an S/NVQ in Guidance.

I hope this response covers all the information you wanted.

New Deal (Young People)

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many employers participating in the New Deal for Young People have taken on from the scheme (a) 1 employee, (b) between 2 and 10 employees, (c) between 10 and 50 employees, (d) between 50 and 100 employees, (e) between 100 and 250 employees and (f) more than 250 employees. [79826]

Mr. Andrew Smith: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Bath (Mr. Foster) on 11 November 1998, Official Report, column 236.

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many employers participating in the New Deal for Young People who have not continued the employment of subsidised employees on the cessation of their subsidy, have subsequently taken on further subsidised employees. [79825]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Material for employers, and guidance to staff of the Employment Service and its partners, on the operation of New Deal for Young People make it clear that it is not acceptable for employers to replace one New Deal employee and another for the purpose of perpetuating the subsidy. Jobcentre staff are advised to refer suspected cases to a central investigation unit: to date, none has been reported.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many people left each New Deal for 18 to 24-year-olds option for a sustained unsubsidised job for each month between January 1998 and January 1999. [81697]

Mr. Andrew Smith [holding answer 22 April 1999]: The information set out in the following table shows how many people left each of the four Options available through New Deal for Young People for jobs, in each month from January 1998 to January 1999 and had not returned to claim Jobseekers Allowance within three months. In addition to these, 41,140 young people have left for sustained unsubsidised employment from other stages of New Deal, and an additional 11,420 have entered sustained subsidised employment.

State Schools (Expenditure)

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what percentage of GDP he expects to be spent on state schools across the UK in the years (a) 1998–99, (b) 1999–2000 and (c) 2000–01 as a result of the comprehensive spending review. [81899]

Ms Estelle Morris: We estimate that recurrent spending on state schools across the UK in 1998–99 will be approximately 2.9 per cent. of Gross Domestic Product. We are unable at this stage to offer a meaningful estimate of spending on state schools in 1999–2000 and 2000–01.

The extra £19 billion across the UK over the next three years provided by the Comprehensive Spending Review for the education sector overall will deliver the manifesto commitment to increase the share of GDP spent on education from 4.8 per cent. in 1996–97 to 5 per cent. by 2001–02.

FE College Principals (Retirement Packages)

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the compliance with the FEFC guidance on retirement financial arrangements for principals of tertiary colleges of the provision made for the recently retired Principal of Wirral Metropolitan College. [81210]

Mr. Mudie: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State notes that the provision made for the recently retired Principal of Wirral Metropolitan College complies with the guidance issued by the FEFC.

DEFENCE

NHS Trusts

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much was paid by his Department to each of the health trusts in which MDHUs operate for the treatment of military personnel in each of the last three years. [80572]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 13 April 1999]: The amounts, in £ million, paid to the three MDHU host NHS trusts for the treatment of military personnel in each of the last three years are shown in the following table. The sums shown are the net payment, taking into account the abatement of charges for the contribution of military clinical staff serving in the MDHU to the treatment of Service patients.

NHS Trust	1996–97	1997–98	1998–99
Plymouth Hospital (Derriford)	1.485	1.381	1.645
Frimley Park Hospital	2.757	3.328	3.652
Peterborough Hospitals	2.036	1.619	1.964

[1] The sums shown for 1998–99 are estimates, based on forecast patient numbers for the year made in the light of numbers treated between April and December 1998. The final sums will not be known until patient numbers for the full financial year are available and a contract reconciliation exercise has been carried out. This is likely to take until June.

RN Physiological Laboratory

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 24 March 1999, Official Report, columns 307–08, if he will list, by case, the experiments that have been performed on goats at the Royal Navy Physiological Laboratory in each of the last 12 months. [81633]

Mr. Doug Henderson: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Mike Hancock, dated 23 April 1999:

I have been asked to reply to your question about the former Royal Navy Physiological Laboratory (RNPL) which is now part of the Centre for Human Sciences (CHS) Sector of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA).

You asked for details, by case, of the experiments, involving goats that have been carried out in each of the last 12 months. All the work is aimed at reducing the risk of serious decompression illness in man following the evacuation of a sunken submarine. Prior to being used in an experiment, goats are familiarised with the experimental procedures and the vessels in which trials will take place. All experiments involve an exposure to raised pressure where the breathing gas is either air or an atmosphere that simulates a possible atmosphere that could be present on a disabled submarine, such as elevated carbon dioxide.

At the end of the exposure to raised pressure the goats are returned to normorbaric pressure, either through decompression to surface, simulating rescue from a distressed submarine (rescue type exposure), or through a simulated submarine escape at the compression and decompression rates to which men have been exposed (escape type exposure). Oxygen breathing is known to decrease the risk of decompression illness and limited oxygen breathing has been used in some initial studies to assess the magnitude of the potential benefit.

The goats are closely monitored for several hours after the experiment for signs of decompression illness. Concentration of various blood constituents may be monitored. A small number of animals have had minor surgery to reduce the trauma or stress involved in collecting an arterial blood sample. In addition the animals may be sedated to further reduce their discomfort. Some goats have also been sedated prior to magnetic resonance imaging of the brain in order to detect sub-clinical effects of repeat pressure exposures.

The details of the experiments over the last 12 months are as follows:

Month	Number of goats	Experiment type
April 1999	0
March 1999	18	Magnetic Resonance Imaging
February 1999	18	Magnetic Resonance Imaging
January 1999	8	Magnetic Resonance Imaging
January 1999	9	Rescue type exposure, decompression to surface
December 1998	4	Escape type exposure, arterial blood samples taken
November 1998	16	Escape type exposure
October 1998	26	Escape type exposure
September 1998	12	Oxygen breathing prior to surfacing, Escape type exposure
September 1998	5	Rescue type exposure, decompression to surface
August 1998	12	Oxygen breathing prior to surfacing, Escape type exposure
August 1998	5	Rescue type exposure, straight decompression to surface
July 1998	0
May 1998	0

In addition to these experiments, the following familiarisation and acquaint procedures were carried out:

June 1998: 6 Goats

August 1998: 7 Goats

March 1999: 9 Goats

I hope this is helpful.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 24 March 1999, Official Report, columns 307–08, how many goats have died in experiments at the Royal Navy Physiological Laboratory in each of the last 12 months. [81634]

Mr. Doug Henderson: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Mike Hancock, dated 23 April 1999:

I have been asked to reply to your question about the former Royal Navy Physiological Laboratory (RNPL) which is now part of the Centre for Human Sciences (CHS) Sector of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA).

You asked for details about the number of goats that have died in experiments in the last 12 months in DERA's research programme to determine the pressure and time limits for the safe escape of Navy personnel from a sunken submarine.

Animals that demonstrate mild or moderate symptoms of decompression illness during any experiment are treated in the same way as humans, with oxygen and recompression therapy. Where sympton are such that recompression therapy would be unlikely to effect a complete recovery, the animal is humanely killed. The number of goats humanely killed in each of the last 12 months is as follows:

Year/month	Number of goats humanely killed at end of experiment
1999
February	0
January	9
1998
December	2
November	4
October	0

Year/month	Number of goats humanely killed at end of experiment
September	2
August	1
July	0
May	0

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 24 March 1999, Official Report, columns 307–08, how many goats have been injured before undergoing experiments at the Royal Navy Physiological Laboratory in the last 12 months; and what anaesthetics are administered to goats before experiments take place. [81635]

Mr. Doug Henderson: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Mike Hancock, dated 23 April 1999:

I have been asked to reply to your question about the former Royal Navy Physiological Laboratory (RNPL) which is now part of the Centre for Human Sciences (CHS) Sector of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA).

You asked for details about the treatment of the goats used in DERA's research programme to determine the pressure and time limits for the safe escape of Navy personnel from a sunken submarine.

No goats are injured before undergoing experiments at DERA's CHS.

With regard to the anaesthetics used on the goats, prior to magnetic resonance imaging where the goats have to be kept absolutely still, they are sedated with a combination of the sedative, Domitor and the analgesic Torbugesic. Magnetic resonance imaging is not a painful process but the analgesic brings about a more profound level of sedation when combined with Domitor. Lignocaine is used as a local anaesthetic prior to arterial cannulation for blood sampling.

General anaesthesia is not used on the goats in the DERA research programme itself. However, animals prepared surgically for arterial blood sampling receive halothane/oxygen/nitrous oxide.

I hope this information is helpful.

Personal Protection Weapons (Northern Ireland)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence under what legal authority his Department may issue personal protection weapons in Northern Ireland; what safeguards prevent the misuse of such weapons; and how many such weapons have been reported (i) missing and (ii) stolen in the last five years. [81138]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 21 April 1999]: Members of the armed forces are entitled to bear firearms and ammunition, without a firearm certificate, under exemptions from firearms legislation. Should Service personnel wish to hold a firearm for a private purpose, however, they must obtain a firearms certificate.

The Army has in place a comprehensive range of procedures designed to prevent misuse of personal protection weapons (PPWs) issued by the Ministry of Defence in Northern Ireland.

The stringent application and approval process takes into account the actual risk to a solder, his/her personal circumstances and general conduct, and advice from the Royal Ulster Constabulary. PPWs are issued only to soldiers who are considered likely to be at risk and there is no automatic entitlement for any category of soldier.

All soldiers with PPWs are given a full briefing concerning security. They also receive handling instruction and live firing practice before issue of the weapon, and at four monthly intervals thereafter.

Any changes to the circumstances of the PPW issue or to the conditions on which they are held must be recorded and approved by the individuals Commanding Officer. Commanding Officers also review bi-annually the issue of PPWs to soldiers under their command.

In total, over the last five years, only one Army issue PPW has been reported as missing and five as stolen.

Building and Property Group

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what security vetting is undertaken of staff employed by Building and Property Group Ltd. and their sub-contractors operating at his Department's establishments. [80044]

Mr. Spellar [pursuant to his reply, 14 April 1999, c. 240]: I regret the answer given was incorrect. My reply should have read

"BPD Ltd. were responsible for security vetting their own staff until last year, when their List X status was removed. The firm continues to carry out Basic Checks for its own staff, but more detailed checks are required before unescorted access to HMNB is allowed. These are carried out by the Defence Vetting Agency, and passes are issued by HMNB on the basis of these checks."

Exercise Dimming Sun

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on which dates the nuclear weapon exercise Dimming Sun will be held; which Government departments and organisations will be taking part in this exercise; whether the media will be invited to the exercise; and what will be the scenario of the exercise. [80826]

Mr. Doug Henderson: It is planned to held Exercise DIMMING SUN between 14 to 18 June 1999. It is a joint UK/US nuclear weapon accident exercise, which will test the procedures in place for responding to the logistic movement of US nuclear weapons. Local authorities and emergency services in Norfolk will be participating in this exercise alongside response forces from the Ministry of Defence, the US Government, and other relevant UK Government Departments and organisations. It is also planned that a media briefing will be held to announce details before the exercise.

Tours of Duty

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he intends to modify the Strategic Defence Review assumptions concerning the length of tours of duty on operations. [81662]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 22 April 1999]: No.

Naval Deployment

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current proportion of the (a) Royal Navy and (b) RN Fleet, (i) committed and (ii) warned to deploy for operations. [81666]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 22 April 1999]: As at 19 April 1999, 55 per cent. of available RN ships (excluding those in long-term maintenance), submarines and supporting Royal Fleet Auxiliary vessels were deployed on operations. In staffing terms, this represents about 15 per cent. of the total trained strength of the Royal Navy and approximately 25 per cent. of the RFA. All other RN units are available for deployment at various periods of notice, depending on their readiness states.

Air Force Deployment

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current proportion of the Royal Auxiliary Air Force deployed on operations. [81661]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 22 April 1999]: Around one and a half per cent. of Royal Auxiliary Air Force personnel are currently deployed on operations.

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current proportion of the (a) RAF and (b) RAF Strike Command, (i) committed and (ii) warned to deploy for operations. [81667]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 22 April 1999]: Approximately 6 per cent. of the trained strength of the RAF and 8 per cent. of Strike Command's trained strength is currently deployed on operations. Approximately 13 per cent. of RAF personnel and 16 per cent. of Strike Command personnel are warned to deploy.

The figures represent personnel deployed away from their parent station and, as such, do not account for personnel supporting operations from their normal station, such as those at RAF Bruggen. Similarly, the figures do not include personnel working at Strike Command or Group Headquarters who are involved as part of their normal tasks in planning activity in support of operations.

Army Deployment

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many of the Army's (a) divisional and (b) brigade headquarters are (i) committed to operations and (ii) warned to deploy for operations. [81669]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 22 April 1999]: The information requested is as follows:

	Committed to operations	Warned to deploy on operations
Divisional headquarters	nil	nil
Brigade headquarters	2	2

DESO Overseas Offices

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence where the overseas offices of the Defence Export Services Organisation are situated; when each office was established; how many staff are currently employed in each; and what is the budget for 1999–2000 for each. [81732]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 22 April 1999]: Details of overseas offices of the Defence Export Services Organisation are as follows:

	Date established	Number of staff	Budget 1999–2000 (£000)
Australia	1989	2	102.8
Brunei	1995	2	103.6

HEALTH

Liver Disease

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to provide increased funding for the national liver units. [81632]

Mr. Hutton: Each year all units designated by the National Specialist Commissioning Advisory Group, which include the liver transplant units and the specialised paediatric liver disease units, apply for the funding they require for the following year. Units can include requests for additional funding to cover increases in activity and service developments. We take into account the recommendations of the Advisory Group when considering funding levels for the national specialist services.

The current allocation is £29.5 million for the liver transplant service and £4.7 million for the specialised paediatric liver service. Over £1 million of additional funding has been agreed for developments in these services in 1999–2000, which includes funding for 20 additional paediatric liver transplants.

Secure Units

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what requirements are placed on local authorities to monitor and record the ethnic origins of those held in secure units. [81895]

Mr. Hutton: Under the Children Act 1989, the local authority responsible for a looked-after child in a secure unit should ensure details of racial origin, culture and linguistic background are recorded and stored. Secure units are required to record and provide ethnic data to the social services inspectorate in advance of inspections.

Dentistry

Mr. Lock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many dentists in the Wyre Forest constituency area are taking new registrations of NHS patients. [81892]

Mr. Denham: Although there are dentists undertaking National Health Service work, their lists are full and therefore no dentists in the Wyre Forest constituency are currently accepting new NHS patients. The health authority is able to direct patients to dentists in neighbouring areas who are still accepting NHS patients. Emergency pain relief clinics are run in Kidderminster and Worcester. Worcestershire Health Authority has recently submitted a personal dental services pilot for consideration that is intended to tackle local problems of access to a dentist.

Food Standards Agency

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the cost to (a) hospitals and (b) other NHS bodies of implementing the charges for the proposed Food Standards Agency. [81795]

Mr. Hutton: No such estimate has been made. Under the Government's proposals, food retail and catering businesses in hospitals and other National Health Service bodies will be liable for the levy if they are required to register with their local authority under the Food Premises (Registration) Regulations 1991, as amended in 1997. We received a large response to public consultation on the draft legislation and proposals for a levy scheme. We will introduce a Bill this session if time is available.

TREASURY

Carbon Emissions

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the basis of the Government's estimate that the climate change levy at the proposed indicative levels will reduce carbon emissions by 1.5 million tonnes per annum. [79350]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 30 March 1999]: As indicated in table 5.1 of 1999 Economic and Fiscal Strategy Report, the estimate of the reduction in carbon emissions resulting from the climate change levy was based on calculations made using the Department of Trade and Industry energy model.

Environmental Taxation

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his policy on environmental taxation; and if he will make a statement. [78410]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 25 March 1999]: The Government's Statement of Intent on Environmental Taxation published in July 1997, sets out the Government's policy on environmental taxation. It commits the Government to exploring the scope for using the tax system—as one instrument, in combination with others like regulation and voluntary action—to secure environmental objectives, and details the criteria used to assess environmental taxes.

The 1999 Budget contained the biggest package of environmental tax reforms ever announced in this country. This will provide continuing incentives for environmental improvement and underlines the Government's commitment to protect and, where possible, enhance our environment.

Details of the Budget 99 environmental tax package are contained in the 1999 Economic and Financial Strategy Review and Financial Statement and Budget Report.

Computers (Taxable Benefit)

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the number of employees charged income tax on any taxable benefit arising from the provision of computer equipment by an employer in (a) 1997–98 and (b) 1998–99. [81707]

Ms Hewitt: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Professional Statisticians

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many staff who have worked as professional statisticians in his Department have left on early retirement in each of the past 10 years; [81182]

(2) how many staff by grade are employed as professional statisticians in his Department; how many of these staff have been accepted as fast stream by the Civil Service Selection Board; and how many have been granted chartered statistician status by the Royal Statistical Society. [81202]

Ms Hewitt: Statistical work is undertaken by a range of specialists such as Research Officers and Social Survey Officers, as well as Statisticians. The following number of professional Statisticians, all of whom have been recruited via the Civil Service Selection Board, are employed in the Departments and Agencies responsible to the Chancellor of the Exchequer:

Office for National Statistics: 123

Treasury: 22

Customs and Excise: 9

Inland Revenue: 21

In addition, the following number of Statistical Officers are employed:

Office for National Statistics: 8

Customs and Excise: 8

Treasury: 1

Inland Revenue: 1

It is not known how many professional Statisticians have been granted Chartered status by the Royal Statistical Society. This information is not recorded and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

In the last ten years, the following number of professional Statisticians have left on early retirement:

Office for National Statistics: 23

Customs and Excise: 2

Treasury: 2

Inland Revenue: 1

Euro

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what staff have been tasked to monitor progress in passing the five economic tests for joining the euro. [81736]

Ms Hewitt: As the Prime Minister explained to the hon. Member on 13 April 1999, Official Report, column 2, the Treasury is the Department responsible for economic and monetary union issues.

Treaty of Amsterdam

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list each of the new responsibilities which he will assume when the signed Treaty of Amsterdam takes effect and for each (a) the likely effect on departmental staffing, (b) the bodies or persons in the European Union principally concerned and (c) the relevant section of that treaty and the consolidated treaties of the European Union and European Community. [80407]

Ms Hewitt: The Treaty of Amsterdam will have minimal impact on the responsibilities of the Department and its staffing.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Public Interest Immunity Certificates

Mr. Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many Public Interest Immunity Certificates he has signed since coming into office. [81446]

Mr. Robin Cook [holding answer 20 April 1999]: Since 1 May 1997, I have signed two Public Interest Immunity Certificates. Both certificates were to protect the operations of the intelligence agencies for which I am responsible and were within the criteria agreed in the light of the recommendations of the Scott Inquiry.

In addition, one certificate was signed by another Foreign Office Minister, Baroness Symons of Vernham Dean.

Devolution Concordat

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions (a) Ministers and (b) officials from his Department have held with (i) the Scottish Office and (ii) the Welsh Office on the drawing up of a concordat governing arrangements by which the (1) Scottish Parliament, (2) National Assembly for Wales and (3) Northern Ireland Assembly may make representations to overseas Governments. [81893]

Mr. Robin Cook: The UK Government will continue to be responsible for international relations after devolution. We recognise that there will be areas within their devolved responsibilities in which the devolved administrations will none the less have interests involving other countries. FCO officials have worked with officials of the Scottish, Welsh and Northern Ireland Offices on draft Concordats on international relations which will be put to the devolved administration when they take office. Ministers have been kept fully informed of the progress of these discussions.

WALES

Euro Task Force

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he had made of the cost to date to public funds of the Euro Task Force for Wales. [80084]

Mr. Michael: All members of the Task Force give their time free. Members are permitted to claim out of pocket expenses for attending meetings, but to date none has done so.

As at 31 March 1999, the Task Force's euro awareness activities incurred a direct cost of £9,256 to public funds.

Noise (Trunk Roads)

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what assessment he has made of the problem of noise to residents from the A449 trunk road near Llanishen in Monmouthshire; [81348]

(2) when he proposes to publish revised criteria for noise mitigation measures on existing trunk roads. [81349]

Mr. Hain: No noise assessment has been undertaken in Llanishen, Monmouthshire. A preliminary analysis of the noise levels from the A449 at Llandenny, immediately adjacent to the road, indicated that it would not meet the noise mitigation criteria announced recently for England. I announced on 23 March 1999, Official Report, columns 126–27, that we would be extending this analysis of noise levels adjacent to the trunk road network in Wales and considering the scope for adapting the criteria to meet specific Welsh circumstances. This review will take some six to nine months to complete.

Following the transfer of functions, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Professional Statisticians

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many staff who have worked as professional statisticians in his Department have left on early retirement in each of the past 10 years. [81180]

Mr. Michael: None.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many staff by grade are employed as professional statisticians in his Department; how many of these staff have been accepted as fast stream by the Civil Service Selection Board; and how many have been granted chartered statistician status by the Royal Statistical Society. [81192]

Mr. Michael: Twenty-five Welsh Office staff are currently employed as professional statisticians. The numbers by grade are:

Grade	Number
Senior Civil Service	1
Grade 6	2
Grade 7	14
Assistant Statistician	8

All the Assistant Statisticians were appointed through the Civil Service Selection Board (CSSB) and are regarded as being in a fast stream training grade. More senior grades are not designated as fast stream, or otherwise, but most of the statisticians in these grades joined the Statistician Group through CSSB. Two are Royal Statistical Society chartered statisticians.

National Assembly

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the directions setting the pay and allowances of members of the National Assembly for Wales. [82304]

Mr. Hain: I have today put copies of The National Assembly for Wales (Assembly Members) (Salaries) Direction 1999, The National Assembly for Wales (Assembly Members) (Allowances) Direction 1999 and The National Assembly for Wales (Assembly Members) (Resettlement Grants) Direction 1999 in the Libraries of the House.

Inward Investment

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions (a) Ministers and (b) officials from his Department have held with the DTI concerning the drawing up of a concordat governing arrangements for encouraging inward investment to different parts of the United Kingdom. [81894]

Mr. Michael: There are on-going discussions on this matter, involving both Ministers and officials. The concordat is one of a number of concordats which will be discussed and concluded between United Kingdom Government Departments and the devolved Administrations in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland once they are established.

Following the transfer of functions, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

SIXTH SERIES OFFICIAL REPORT VOLUME 329

SESSION 1998–99

13th April—23rd April 1999

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index to the daily parts and weekly Hansard is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Indexing Service (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc., between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes, and cannot, therefore, be used in conjunction with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There will, however, be headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one will find not only Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instruments etc., under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Contributions by Speaker and deputies are brought together under the heading 'Speaker and deputies'. Significant rulings and statements are indicated by the sub-heading 'Rulings and statements'.

Opposition Day Debates and Estimates Day Debates are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates, etc. (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Com = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, res = resolution, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
